VOL. 49 | NO. 4 | WINTER 2009

FROM THE PRESIDENT

Dear friends,

On a blustery Saturday recently, the college dedicated the Norman E. Hege Education Center at the college's Moore Biological Field Station north of Winfield. You could say that the dedication of a modest log home in the middle of a pasture is hardly a big moment in Kansas. But the people who attended the dedication just couldn't stop smiling. That's because the event symbolizes great things that are happening at Southwestern.

Philanthropy. The Hege Education Center was made possible by a generous endowment gift from Keith and Elizabeth Hege of Tucson, Ariz. They started building the endowment in 2000, during the college's last big capital campaign. Now the first fruits of that endowment are being seen, but there will be more, many more, because endowments give forever.

Sustainability. The Center is the college's first "off-the-grid" facility. Its electricity is provided by a hybrid system that combines solar panels with a small wind turbine, both of which charge a large bank of batteries that power the building. We'll learn from this project and put our knowledge to work across the college.

A world without boundaries.

Among the guests at the dedication were a group of Chinese educators from Huangshan University. They were in Winfield to sign a faculty and student exchange agreement with Southwestern. Their curiosity and enthusiasm for education were very evident, and it was fun to showcase for them the "hands-on" and active approach to education that makes our college great.

We expect big things from our little house on the prairie!

Thanks for all you do for Southwestern.

Best regards,

Dick Merriman

ADMINISTRATION VIEWPOINT

Last summer, as we looked to our students returning from break, there was an intense sense of uncertainty around Southwestern College. For several months we had been hearing forecasts of a new flu strain that could be deadly in the very age range concentrated on college campuses. The H1N1 virus (or swine flu, as it was originally called) was a topic that concerned SC personnel, our students, and their families.

We started educating students as soon as they moved in to take extraordinary precautions against sharing germs – signs were posted that encouraged handwashing and 'vampire' sneezing, students and staff alike were urged to isolate themselves if they felt ill, professors and students prepared to use our advanced technology resources to keep on track without being in contact with others.

As expected, the first two months of the fall semester have been marked by a higher-than-usual amount of sickness. Our nurse's office has treated more students than usual suffering from colds and fever, strep, and yes, a few cases of H1N1 flu. Because we don't have facilities on campus to isolate students, we've encouraged these ill students to go home and separate themselves from the rest of the campus population. As soon as the vaccine is available (expected to be in early December) we'll have a free on-campus vaccination clinic.

Possibly because we've been so vigilant, we haven't had the debilitating epidemic many had feared. Students are much more aware that their actions in caring for themselves have an impact on the entire community. And for both of these things, we are thankful.

Sincerely,

Daniel L Falk

Great Performances campaign kicks off

Southwestern College publicly unveiled its Great Performances Capital Campaign and announced plans to build Richard L. Jantz Stadium, a new athletic home for the Southwestern Moundbuilders and Winfield High School Vikings, during Homecoming 2009. President Dick Merriman made the announcement to a large gathering of alumni and friends during a Friday evening banquet in Stewart Field House.

The college also announced the national co-chairs of the Great Performances campaign: Richard Jantz '70, Lawrence; James Farney '53, Vero Beach, Fla.; Madeline '83 and Kenneth Norland, Winfield. Many other alumni and friends of the college are serving as volunteers in the athletic and performance arts facets of the campaign.

The Great Performances campaign began on July 1, 2008, and has focused, to date, on securing leadership commitments for the stadium project, for renovation of the college's Richardson Auditorium to create a new performing arts center, and for the college's endowment and program budgets. Merriman announced that commitments for the campaign total almost $8 million. The goal for the campaign, which will end on June 30, 2012, is $25 million in current and deferred gift commitments.

The college announced that construction of the new stadium on campus will begin in early 2010, with the goal of having the stadium ready for competition for the fall 2010 football and soccer season. The stadium will be named for Richard L. Jantz, a 1970 graduate of Southwestern. (See related story, inset.)

"We have a lot of work left to do," Merriman said in announcing the campaign, "but we think that showing progress on the project, and showcasing the college and community leaders who have moved us forward, will motivate others to get involved and help us wrap this up. The college's alumni and friends have responded well. These pledges, combined with the $1 million commitment from the Winfield public schools, will allow us to begin construction of the stadium in early 2010. The new stadium should be ready and waiting for the fall 2010 football season."

Superintendent of USD 465 Marvin Estes '66 said, "Southwestern College and the Winfield public schools have a long history of collaboration and partnering which has expanded opportunities for students and faculty in both organizations. The Great Performances Campaign will continue that effort offering students and teachers, patrons, and the citizens of Winfield quality venues for learning, instructing, and enjoying sporting events, school and community events, and fine arts performances."

The other performance venue slated for improvement with campaign funds is the auditorium in the Christy Administration Building. The college is seeking gifts totaling a little over $2 million to fund a complete renovation of the facility. The goal of the renovation, said Merriman, is to create a beautiful and well-equipped performing arts center that will properly support teaching, rehearsal, and performances, along with major lectures and convocations. No commencement date for construction has been set and fund-raising efforts are on-going, Merriman said.

Richard L. Jantz Stadium to be ready for fall 2010 sports

Next fall football will be played at Southwestern College in the Richard L. Jantz Stadium.

Naming of the new stadium was announced during the Great Performances campaign kick-off dinner during Homecoming 2009. Jantz, a 1970 graduate of the college, lives in Lawrence and is owner of Millard Management, a crop insurance company serving farmers across the region.

"We're very grateful for Rich's leadership in the stadium fund drive," said President Dick Merriman. "He not only made the lead gift for this project, he has been instrumental in building enthusiasm for the project and attracting other donors. It's a pleasure to recognize his leadership and generosity."

A native of Cimarron, Jantz is a former member of Southwestern's Board of Trustees and has been enthusiastically involved in the fund raising for the stadium project.

During his years on campus he was a member of the tennis team, and co-founded the Beta Rho Mu fraternity.

The new stadium will be used by both Southwestern College and Winfield High School for athletic events including football and soccer, and community events that include the annual July 4 celebration and fireworks. Both schools schedule Commencement exercises in the stadium.

Campus Players hope to name main stage for Callisons

Norman Callison put an indelible mark on the Southwestern College theatre department during years in which he was a student (learning from Helen Graham) and a faculty member (who co-founded dinner theatre at the college).

Now, SC's former and current Campus Players are determined to make the Callison name an indelible part of the arts facilities at Southwestern College.

A drive to raise $100,000 to name the stage in the renovated main auditorium at Southwestern College for Norman and Roxy Callison has been started by their former students, and more than half the total needed was pledged during Homecoming weekend.

"This is the 40th anniversary of Norman's first class (Roxy was part of that class), and the group that gathered at Homecoming decided it would be a fitting tribute to have the stage in the renovated auditorium permanently bear his name," Roger Moon says.

Renovation of the stage is one factor in the $2.8 auditorium project that is part of the college's Great Performances capital campaign.

"We are hopeful that students, friends, community members, and anyone else who might have benefited from Norman and Roxy Callison's enormous impact on theatre in Winfield will want to participate in this effort," Moon adds.

For more information, contact Mike Farrell, vice president for institutional advancement at Southwestern College, at 620-229-6286.

Decades of Campus Players gathered Oct. 17 during a Homecoming 2009 reunion. The group marched in the Homecoming parade, reminisced about past performances, and determined to lead a drive to name the campus's main stage for Norman and Roxy Callison.

Helmer leads Builders to KCAC title (repeat x 30)

By Charles Osen '94

After 31 years of coaching cross-country and 29 consecutive Kansas Collegiate Athletic Conference championships, it would be easy to lose a competitive edge.

Not if your name is Jim Helmer.

As he entered his 32nd year as head cross country coach at Southwestern, Helmer felt he might have his most talented team ever. However, for the first time in 30 years, some doubts from those outside the program started to arise.

SC began the season strong until illness took its toll on the men's team during the middle of the season. Then the Builder runners lost to a KCAC team in a race for the first time since the Jimmy Carter presidency. SC entered the KCAC championships as an underdog.

Coach Helmer's belief in his squads talent and ability prevailed, though, as SC won an unprecedented 30th consecutive title by 11 points.

"This was the closest in margin of victory in all the 30," Helmer says. "It was probably the most exciting because we were the underdogs going into the race. I was confident that if we got healthy and ran like we were capable we would come out on top. I wasn't sure if we were 100%, though, after four of our top five got hit by the flu, one with the swine flu. To win this one was very gratifying."

Helmer's experience and knowledge led this victory as much as anything.

"I have gotten better with experience," Helmer says. "I am pretty careful of keeping track of what we do and how much mileage we do. I look back over several years of workouts and see what has been effective. I think I am smarter than I was. When I first started it was a high mileage time in practice. I have learned that we get better return by working smarter."

Helmer's success speaks for itself. His work has produced a total of seven

NAIA national champions in men's cross country and track. Eighty-eight of his athletes have earned NAIA All-American status a total of 199 times, and 465 separate athletes have earned all-conference status during his tenure.

Helmer's greatest memory came at the 1982 national championships held at the University of Wisconsin-Parkside. His team didn't qualify for the race but two individuals did – Steve Delano and Mike Lambing.

"Steve and Mike had disappeared from our sight as they ran the course," Helmer recalls. "Then a group of three appeared and two of them were ours. It is something I will never forget."

Within Helmer the fire still burns to win conference championships, groom terrific student athletes, and compete with the elite at the national championships. And yet with all of his success, the Lyons native doesn't gloat or brag about his amazing and seemingly untoppable accomplishments.

He and his wife, Deb (Settle) '71, have three children: Cory '99, Cassie Turner '03, and Ashley '10. A few years ago, Cory was diagnosed with a brain tumor. He had surgery and then a year's worth of chemotherapy. He has recovered and serves as a reminder of what's truly important.

"I have always been pretty grounded," Helmer says. "I didn't need a wake-up call but that certainly got my attention. You think things are going pretty good but they can change in a big hurry. We have been so blessed."

Helmer is a family man, a characteristic that spills over into his coaching. Many of his former runners e-mailed him recently wondering what was going on with this men's team. Former runners, some traveling from as far as Kansas City and Oklahoma City, traveled to be at the KCAC championship this year. Helmer, with a warm smile, says that those alumni spread all across the course to cheer and lend support to the SC team.

"It gave me chills," Helmer says. "We had a Builder huddle afterwards and we took pictures. They were a proud group of alumni. Cory got some runners from his era there. He told me that was the most fun and excitement he had experienced since running at SC. You can't replicate or duplicate what it means to be a Southwestern athlete and to have all those alumni there cheering us on and supporting us made it all the more gratifying."

And so Helmer continues, driven to succeed but not obsessed with it. And he has no plans of retiring anytime soon.

Builders in Ministry

Theme for Builders in Ministry Week Feb. 22-25, 2010, is Worship as Passionate Theology. Keynote speaker and Parkhurst lecturer is Dr. Lester Ruth, professor of Christian worship at Asbury Theological Seminary. The workshops will focus on the creative aspects of worship and their theological integration. For more information see the Web site, www.sckans.edu/bim-week.

On national stage

The Roberts Brothers (including SC's Jeremiah Roberts, second from left) were a featured group at the mid-November Memphis national convention of the Church of God in Christ. This venue has sparked the careers of such performers as the Winans and other well-known groups.

Butler County 2+2

A new agreement between Southwestern College and Butler Community College will allow BCC graduates to transfer easily into Professional Studies degree completion courses.

"The partnership is designed to allow for maximum transfer of credit hours so that learners can transition seamlessly from pursuit of an associate's degree into a bachelor's program," says Deb Stockman, director of marketing and new media for Professional Studies.

According to the agreement, all coursework presented by students who have attended Butler Community College will transfer to Professional Studies, with the exception of varsity athletics or courses identified by the first institution as developmental/remedial. Students transferring with an associate's degree from Butler Community College will not be required to take any further general education coursework if they have already completed English composition I and II as well as a college level math course. Learners will only be required to complete coursework in their chosen major plus any additional coursework needed to reach a minimum of 60 hours of upper division course work.

PS offers new public speaking course online

Southwestern College Professional Studies is now offering its course in public speaking online. The course is based on the long-time standard textbook The Art of Public Speaking and is the same speech course Professional Studies has been offering on ground. However, the latest edition of the textbook features a connection to modern software that allows learners to complete the course online.

"The unique nature of this program allows learners to upload their four required speeches to a central location where they can view and critique the speeches of other students and learn from each other," says course instructor Gary Rees.

Professional Studies honored by military magazine for second consecutive year

Military Advanced Education magazine has announced the selections for their 3rd Annual Guide to America's Military Friendly Colleges, and for the second year in a row, Southwestern College is among those to be honored. The competition drew hundreds of applications from across the nation, and only 60 schools were designated the most military-friendly.

"The college set a strategic goal to assist military personnel complete bachelor's and master's degrees nine years ago," says Southwestern College President Dick Merriman. "Because so many of our Professional Studies personnel have prior military experience, we feel we are uniquely qualified to work with those in all branches of the service. We understand the culture and even the military acronyms."

Military learners account for about 65% of Professional Studies' total enrollment, and each six-week session includes about 700 military/veteran learners. All programs are completely online, with no charge for transfer hours, no proctored exams and no application for admission fee. As with all Professional Studies learners, military personnel can take classes when convenient, and sit out sessions when needed.

Southwestern College Professional Studies transfers up to 64 hours of military training toward a bachelor's degree and will consider military training that has been evaluated by the American Council on Education (ACE) at the graduate level to count toward a master's degree.

Building for the Future

As a farmer and a pilot, the earth and sky were important to Norman Hege '64. "When I'm flying over farms I wish I was down there farming. When I'm farming and I see a plane fly over, I wish I was up there flying. I have a very good life," he told his family.

Norman died in a car accident in 1987, but an endowment established by Keith '56 and Elizabeth Hege has now ensured that he will be remembered by others who love the land. Flanked by Keith and Elizabeth, Norman's widow, Phyllis, cut a ribbon to open the Norman Hege Educational Center at Southwestern College's Floyd and Edna Moore Biological Field Station.

For nearly a decade students have studied an astonishingly diverse array of ecosystems at the 240-acre field station, from tallgrass prairie to the rock-bottom Dutch Creek. Faculty taught in the open air, and classes have taken shelter from the elements in an old barn on the property.

The Hege Center will change that.

The newly-constructed log cabin is a large classroom with access to power for light microscopes, overhead projectors, aquarium pumps, and other scientific instruments. Students can plug in their laptops and work on reports just feet from where they are gathering data.

And the center is unique among the college's facilities: It is completely off the grid, generating its own power using solar panels and a wind turbine. Banks of batteries store up to 20 kilowatt hours of power, and are constantly being recharged by the renewable power sources. A composting toilet (underwritten by Kent and Sharon Olmstead) provides for sanitation needs.

This center, Keith Hege told about 60 guests at the ribbon-cutting, represents the Biblical mustard seed in the college's goal of sustainable living.

"We are planting a little green plant," he said, "and it will put down roots. And we will watch this little mustard seed grow into something that transcends the college."

Builders in the Building

The construction of the Norman Hege Education Center brought together the talents and contributions of many Moundbuilders: Jeff Camp '82, contractor for construction of the cabin. Brian Robinson '05 and Justin Cates, Cates Supply, construction of wind turbine. Alex Gottlob '09, trees and landscaping.

Before us stands a simple log cabin, perhaps not too much larger than the sod houses that the early settlers might have built. Our hope is that this cabin will become an important nexus for the study of the ecology of the prairie landscape that surrounds us. But it means even more to us than that.

Now more than ever we need to reach out to the next generation to help them learn about the delicate interlocking nature of the prairie ecosystem and all of Earth's ecosystems. If there is one idea that all of my ecology students learn, it is that you can't change just one thing. All life is interconnected. All actions are inter-related. In one sense this lesson teaches us some terrible truths about the devastating environmental impacts that have been produced by some of our species' foolish missteps. But from this idea also comes hope, a hope that small changes for the good can result in an interwoven cascade of effects with far-reaching consequence for the betterment of our home and the species that we share it with. Small changes like the building of this cabin.

Clark '81, have recreated their historical high school football history by making a video documentary depicting the rich championship football history of Booker T. Washington High School in Tulsa, Okla. Burks, with his incredible knowledge of the school's football history, was the producer and Clark was the video coordinator. The video includes footage of previous title teams, players that have played in the national football league, and segments of the years of segregation/integration and the impact on the school and community. Local observers state that watching this video should be a prerequisite for incoming freshmen football players, and should also be included in the school's history curriculum.
