From The President

As I write this, the campus is filling with new and returning students. An observer from outside Southwestern might say the college is coming back to life after its traditional summer break. That observer would be wrong.

Quite a while ago, on the day I was inaugurated as president, I peered into the future and stated that “I see a campus that hums morning, noon, and night, in all four seasons, and doesn’t confine its gifts to people between the age of 18 and 21.” I haven’t batted a thousand with my predictions about Southwestern’s future, but that one was on the money.

Southwestern never sleeps. Adults in our Professional Studies online programs study year-round and, with active duty military personnel studying while they are deployed overseas, around the clock. Much the same could be said of people around the world who are engaged with the Wilke Institute for Discipleship. Our graduate programs in education bustle in the summer as teachers and school administrators work toward needed credentials.

On the Winfield campus we’ve seen a nice surge of activity with summer camps and conferences, including a leadership camp offered in partnership with Rotary, the Cole Family Music Festival, and summer theatre camps. Not forgetting athletics and our rural roots, the college hosts the only football camp in the state for eight-man teams.

The college touches many thousands of people each year. Your encouragement and support make that possible, and all of us at Southwestern are in your debt.

Thanks for all you do for Southwestern!

Best regards,

Dick Merriman
President

The Builder Nation. Both the main campus and Professional Studies have rich histories.

Professional Studies is working to integrate with the institutional brand in Winfield—with a comprehensive presentation of Southwestern, we can better serve our communities at both the main campus and Professional Studies.

Residential students can benefit from the relationships we are building in PS with employers and organizations. Our PS students are working professionals, many willing to be mentors to main campus students. And certainly our residential students will someday be working professionals who may want to continue their education online.

Students attending through Professional Studies are keen to know we are a ‘real’ college…with football, basketball, choir and other residential campus activities. And of course they have children who we hope will consider the exceptional experience on our Winfield campus.

The essence and mission of Southwestern College transcends physical location and student demographics. Our uniqueness is in providing all our students with a transformational experience through value-based learning that emphasizes intellectual, personal and spiritual growth with leadership through service. That is a story worth telling!

Small schools, big impact: Private colleges show collective pride

A new economic study commissioned by the Kansas Independent Colleges Association resulted in news that was unsurprising to persons who watch the economic climate of the state.

Small colleges make a big impact. Released in mid-July, the study showed that Kansas’ 18 private colleges generate nearly $981 million in new income each year for the Kansas economy. The economic impact of the college is enough to create 21,968 new jobs in Kansas every year and generate $1.8 billion in social benefits to the state through increased business output and improvements in health and public safety that accrue from the private college graduates.

“To put the impact of Kansas private colleges in context, $981 million is more than the state could expect to earn from hosting the NFL Super Bowl nine times,” says Matt Lindsey, president of the Kansas Independent College Association and Fund which commissioned the study “Collectively they are the seventh-largest private employer based in Kansas.”

When counted as a group Kansas’ private colleges enroll more out-of-state students to Kansas than any other Kansas university—and those students, often as not, stay in Kansas after graduation, Lindsey adds.

In addition, private colleges collectively are the largest single philanthropy in the state, and the nearly 261,000 visitors to private college each year is more than the number of visitors who come to Kansas for hunting, fishing, and wildlife watching combined.

“We have always known that Kansas’ independent colleges were important to the Kansas economy,” Lindsey says. “This study demonstrates just how truly powerful the contribution is that our students, faculty, and institutions make and how essential Kansas’ independent colleges are to Kansas’ future.”

And the collective impact of the colleges in Kansas is mirrored on a local level in each of the communities where a college is located. Southwestern’s impact in Winfield, for example, is not limited to its status as one of the community’s largest employers. In celebration of its 20th anniversary of its founding, Leadership Southwestern has compiled statistics showing its impact over the past two decades:

- Service hours contributed to the community: 50,845
- Grant dollars contributed to the community: $277,800

Service Learning Team Alumni in service careers:

102

Besides the 21,968 jobs that the colleges’ activities could generate, the colleges themselves employ 4,390 faculty and staff in Kansas, making the colleges collectively the seventh largest non-governmental employer based in the state. KICA colleges receive zero institutional funds from the state budget, thus nearly all of the colleges’ operating budgets are privately funded.

Other highlights of the study include:

- Kansas’ private colleges gave nearly $120 million in privately-funded student aid to college students, making the colleges collectively the single largest charitable organization in Kansas.
- Kansas private colleges enroll more than 10,500 out-of-state students each year, more out-of-state students to Kansas than any other college or the university in the state.
- 261,500 visitors come to Kansas’ independent colleges each year on average and generate $14.1 million in income to the state. The number of visitors is nearly 90,000 more than the number of visitors who come to Kansas for hunting, fishing, and wildlife watching combined.

New faculty faces include two deans

An unusually large group of new faculty—including new academic deans for main campus and Professional Studies, a reflection of a new administrative structure that has Provost Andy Sheppard overseeing the two deans and directing a more unified academic program throughout the institution.

New faculty include:

- Peter Heckman, academic dean for main campus. He holds a Ph.D. in philosophy from Northwestern University. Before joining Southwestern College, Heckman was serving as the professor of interdisciplinary studies and associate dean at the University College, Zayed University in United Arab Emirates. Prior to that, he held a variety of administrative and teaching positions at Nebraska Wesleyan University. Heckman said he was the perfect candidate for the position because he had a passion for higher education.

- Amy Lash Esau, academic dean for professional studies. She was the director of academic development for adult learner undergraduate and graduate programs at University of Northwestern in St. Paul, Minn. She holds a Ph.D. in family social sciences from the University of Minnesota.

- Christopher Barker, assistant professor of political science, Ph.D. in political science from Claremont Graduate University. Most recently, he has been the Th.W. Smith postdoctoral fellow in U.S. Legal/Constitutional History at Ohio State University.

- Lalith Gamage, assistant professor of chemistry, Ph.D. in organic chemistry from New Mexico State University. He has been an adjunct professor and lab director at Western New Mexico University.

- Debbie McAlister-Gallander, director of the MBA program, M.S. in organizational development from Pepperdine University.

- Diane Nickelson, assistant professor of teacher education, Ed.D. in educational leadership from Wichita State University. She served as the principal at Clearwater Elementary School and then as assistant principal at Clearwater High School.

- Amber Peterson, assistant professor of music (strings), Ph.D. in music education from Case Western Reserve University. Peterson has served as an adjunct instructor at a variety of schools including the University of Florida and Kent State University.

- Heather Pianalto, instructor of mathematics, master’s degree from Oklahoma State University.

- Marcia Stoess, math literacy center director, master’s degree in statistical sciences from Southern Methodist University. She has been serving as an instructor of mathematics at Hutchinson College Community College and had taught math at McPherson College.

- Brian Winnie, assistant professor of music (choir), doctor of musical arts from the University of Washington, Seattle. He has served as a part-time lecturer at the University of Washington, Tacoma.

Other highlights of the study include:

ow big a deal can it be when a single flower blooms?
In the case of the Southwestern College corpse flower, a very, very big deal.

Greenhouse director and professor emeritus Max Thompson had known that the Amorphophallus titanum he had cultivated was getting ready to bloom in mid-July, so he let the public know this beautiful but stinky plant was ready for its close-up. Not only did the news media (including the Associated Press and CNN) pay attention, enough viewers tuned into the college’s live stream of the event that it gave the campus servers problems.

On Friday, July 17, when the flower finally opened, though, everyone wanted to experience the strong stench of the plant with their own noses. About 400 people visited the greenhouse that day, and on Saturday Byron Rinke (above) had directed visitors in one door and out another when an estimated 1,400 persons came for a sniff.

Native to Western Sumatra in Indonesia, this plant gets its name from the odor it produces when it blooms – the smell of a dead mammal. This odor attracts blowflies and carrion beetles which the plant uses to pollinate itself. It is a rare event getting ready to bloom in mid-July, so he let the public know that the

The corpse flower in SC’s greenhouse drew a huge crowd of curious smellers who wanted to experience the rotting-flesh odor for themselves. Byron Rinke (above) estimates 1,400 got up close and personal with the rare specimen on its one-time blooming July 19.

A world view that stretches far beyond Winfield has resulted in two Winfield couples being named the 2014 Southwestern College Ambassadors. Allan and Susan Norton and Don ‘52 and Betsy Drennan will be honored during Homecoming festivities Oct. 4.

The Normans and the Drennans have been deeply involved in work with Southwestern’s growing international student population. They have been foster parents, and have recruited dozens of other families to join them in providing homes away from home for the international Moundbuilders.

Allan and Susan have long been involved with international students in other ways. As a customer issues manager for major airlines, Allan had traveled extensively overseas; Susan (a self-employed cosmetologist) had been on the American Field Service board that brought many international high school students to Winfield. The parents of three children, they discovered they missed having kids around the house when their daughter left for college.

“My friend Candy Petty, who was a trustee at the college at the time, told me there were two young Irish men attending Southwestern. They had not connected with anyone from the Winfield community, and Candy told me they probably would enjoy coming out for supper,” Susan recalls.

So Susan called Dawn Plas-Bailey, then dean of students, and Plas-Bailey connected the Normans with Jamie Boyd and Keith McGovern. Soon a close relationship developed between the Americans and the Irishmen.

The next year Plas-Bailey called Susan Norton and asked her to help organize a host family program with families in Winfield. That first year about a dozen students were paired with families but within a few years, 36 international students were scheduled to enroll at SC so Susan asked Betty Drennan to help with the program.

The Drennans had been involved with international visitors for many years through Rotary International, hosting the visitors in their home, organizing activities, and hosting two exchange students on three-month stays.

“When the host family program began, we felt that it was important to get the students into homes in the community,” Betsy says. “We felt that would ease their transition from one culture to another and help them get a good start their first year at SC.”

Susan spent many hours matching the students with host families, and the Drennans hosted at least two gatherings each year on their deck. Food was always a big part of the gatherings, and occasional guests (including Santa) were welcomed.

“One the student graduates you may never hear from them again, and then you may have a friend forever,” Betsy says.

After hosting students for 17 years (the Normans) and 15 years (the Drennans), this year the two couples are retiring from the program.

They were wonderful, fulfilling years,” Susan adds. “We became very close friends, the program expanded, and we got many Winfield couples involved with the international students and the college. We made friendships with students all over the world.”

Phantom plus organ music to highlight Homecoming

A n unusual treat is in store for movie buffs during Saturday evening of Homecoming 2014. The classic 1925 silent film The Phantom of the Opera will be presented Oct. 4 at 8 p.m. in Richardson Performing Arts Center with live organ music by Brett Valliant.

An American organist in demand for his ability to perform many different genres of music Valliant is well-known for scoring and accompanying films but is best known for dramatic films such as King of Kings, Phantom of the Opera, The Ten Commandments, Broken Blossoms, Wings, and The Eagle. He plays annually for film festivals including the International Film Festival hosted by the American Film Institute, and has been a featured performer at national conventions of the American Guild of Organists and the American Theatre Organ Society.

Valliant has toured extensively as a solo artist, as featured soloist with orchestras, and as film accompanist abroad and throughout the United States. He lives in Wichita where he is a full-time musician at First United Methodist Church, overseeing a music department seen by thousands across the Midwest on the church’s television programs.

Cost is $15 general admission, $12 alumni, $8 students. For ticket information, contact Jessica Falk at 800-846-1543 ext. 6141.

Larry Schuster isn’t a showy kind of guy. He’s soft-spoken, and tries to deflect praise of his work to people who work with him. “Jimmie (Tagg) and Stan (Nichols), they’re the ones who do an awful lot of this,” he says.

But make no mistake about it – Larry is the one responsible for Southwestern’s campus landscaping, which has been extraordinarily beautiful during 2014’s temperate summer. Still, if you tell him how wonderful the grounds look he’ll duck his head and compliment his student workers.

He lets his work take any admiration he might deserve: The graceful sweep of annuals and perennials softening the west side of Stewart Field House and greeting campus visitors on King Drive. The hundreds of iris and tulip bulbs he’s planted on campus that let students know each year when spring has arrived. The pocket beds of begonias and pansies that brighten walkways on The Hill.

The beauty comes not only from the hard work Schuster and his crew put in, it’s the result of experience.

At 80 years old, Larry is the oldest full-time employee currently working on campus.

He began his career in landscaping with the state highway department, where for 15 years he planted grass and trees in roadides. Then for three decades he owned Schuster Yard and Garden in Winfield, before selling the business. In the spring of 2007 he joined Sodexo (the company responsible for SC’s physical plant) as head groundskeeper.

“Everything I have done in my life has built on the next step,” Larry admits. “The Lord has looked after me.”

A special challenge at Southwestern has been managing the college’s trees. The trees that give Southwestern much of its distinctive beauty have lifespan and disease issues often not apparent to those who aren’t expert in their cultivation.

“I’ve tried to replace the trees that we’ve taken out,” Schuster says. “We’ve lost several to Dutch elm disease, and will be losing several more, and the red cedar and arbor vitae on the front part of campus are over 100 years old which is unheard of as a lifespan for these.”

And in spite of the press of the everyday upkeep of the yards, plants, and trees, Larry is always looking toward the future. He dreams of terracing The Hill to control rain run-off and make mowing easier. He plans for the next automatic sprinkling systems that will be installed.

But if experience and hard work are the tools Larry Schuster counts on to make the campus beautiful, his supervisor says one extra ingredient is added.

“Larry of course has a tremendous work ethic. But he is not driven by an aggressive ‘get ahead’ or competitive urge. I honestly think that Larry is driven by love,” says Jeff Gile, Sodexo site director and Schuster’s supervisor. “I think his faith gives him strength, but I believe he loves people, and he loves plants, and tries to help everything he touches to succeed.”
There is no traditional summer session on Southwestern College’s main campus. No one is attending early morning classes and earning credit hours in core courses. But that doesn’t mean learning isn’t happening on the hill.

“The campus puts out its welcome mat in the summer to further its educational mission,” says Steve Wilke, vice president for planning and new programs.

The summer program is an intentional effort by the college to give year-round use to grounds and facilities. Aside from a few isolated cases, summer college classes had not traditionally been part of the institution’s culture, but upgrading and air conditioning made the college’s dorms and classrooms perfect for hot weather usage. The first director of camps and conferences was hired in 2000, and in 2010 the college trustees approved a strategic direction designed to grow an even more robust summer program.

The plan is working: Between May 24 and July 31, more than 1,500 different individuals attended an event on campus. These included teachers taking part in the residential component of their doctoral program and international students who chose to remain on campus during break, but the vast majority of these individuals were middle school and high school students involved in an expanding menu of summer camps.

Among the camps were both brand-new offerings and others that have around for years. Jessica Falk, who is now director of camps and conferences, is on-campus administrator for all of the camps, plus the family reunions and athletic camps sponsored by individuals. She points out that most camps need a few years of low attendance before they mature; it takes about five years to establish a camp, she estimates.

This year, for example, the Amp It Up Camp attracted 15 high school students to a five-day camp for aspiring worship leaders. They worked with professional music ministers as well as Martin Rude, Stephen Butler, and other SC staff members, and next year Falk has set a goal of 40 to attend the event.

The Cole Family Summer Music Festival, on the other hand, has grown steadily and in its seventh season 70 students from Kansas, Texas, and Oklahoma were on camp for six days. A noted conductor and faculty and counselors from all over the nation produced outstanding final concerts and an affinity for the college—before they left campus, 40 of these campers had reserved their places in next year’s festival.

That’s the goal, of course. Summer at Southwestern has educational goals, but it also serves to give exposure to Southwestern.

“It’s a great recruiting tool,” Falk says. “These students experience life on campus, and have interaction with our faculty and staff. Even for the camps that are not administered by our staff, we have students from all over the area who are playing in the new Jantz Stadium, or performing in the Richardson Performing Arts Center, and we’re confident they will remember these opportunities when they’re choosing a college to attend.”

This has had proven success—social sciences chair Cheryl Rude estimates at least 15 Builders have enrolled at SC after attending the Rotary Youth Leadership Camp since it began as a cooperative venture between Leadership and the Winfield Rotary Club, and two of this year’s Summer Music Festival counselors came to SC because they had enjoyed their camp experience.

“We still have room to grow,” Falk adds. “There are weeks we can fill with camps and conferences, and organizations that can use the technology we have in our classrooms and residence halls. Campus is a great place to host a family reunion or a church retreat or conference.”

For more information on camps and conferences, contact Jessica.falk@sckans.edu — summer will be here soon, and the welcome mat is out.
1970s

Bonnie and Bob Niles ’70/’69 have started a new business, Summit Realty, in Arkansas City. Bonnie is the managing broker and Realtor and Bob is a Realtor.

Mark Webb ’72 has retired after spending 41 years in public education in Kansas. Webb began his career as a teacher and coach at Ingalls, and spent his final 36 years at Southwestern Heights Jr. Sr. High School at Kinnear. He served as a classroom teacher, coach, activities director, and junior high principal during his time at Southwestern Heights. Mark and his wife, Marilyn, live in Plains. They plan to travel and spend time with their six grandchildren.

Dale Voth ’74 retired last year after teaching for 39 years. Marla (Rowe) Voth ’75 retired in May after teaching for 38 years. Dale is currently the Gray County recreation director in Camar, and Marla will probably substitute teach this fall.

Linda (Voth) Coleman ’80 was recently named senior human resources manager for TECK Aerospace, overseeing human resource activities for four plants located in the Wichita and Seattle areas. Linda and Erle ’92 live near Winfield and are anticipating the arrival of two grandchildren this summer.

Kimberly Snapp ’81 is a wound care physician with Via Christi’s Wound and Skin Clinic, as well as working as the executive director of House of Hope Wichita for the last nine years. House of Hope Wichita works with troubled teens and their families to restore passion, love, honor, and respect to the home. With their counseling office established, plans for the organization’s next growth phase include building a residential home for the teens.

1990s

Paul McDonald ’91 has been named the parliamentary representative for Toastmasters District 22 for the term of July 2014–June 2015. He will serve as a parliamentary resource for Toastmasters clubs in all of Kansas and the western half of Missouri. Paul was recently accepted as a member of the National Association of Parliamentarians and achieved a perfect score on his entrance exam. (He says he has proof, in case of a dispute of his SC. professors have any doubts!) Brian Dutton ’92/’02 has been promoted to vice president of asset management at CornerBank in Winfield. Dutton joined CornerBank in 2005, serving as both a trust officer and investment executive. Dutton is also a certified trust and financial advisor (CFTA).

Neil Dougherty ’93 retired as MICT lieutenant of the Winfield Area EMS after 32 years of service.

Charles Olsen ’94 and his son Aver spent their summer broadcasting all the home games for the El Dorado Bronco baseball team. The team is made up of collegiate baseball players from around the United States who come to El Dorado to play summer baseball. Olsen, who broadcasts as Curt Caden, will continue for his 15th year as the play-by-play voice for Southwestern College football and baseball games for the upcoming season. His El Dorado broadcasts have been archived on YouTube and can be seen and heard searching www.youtube.com for “Curt Caden.”

Justin Waite ’95 retired as director of Winfield Area EMS after 25 years of service.

2000s

Justin Olmsted ’01 has accepted a position of assistant professor of history and director of history education at the University of Central Oklahoma in Edmond.

Lisa (Reynolds) Kuchar ’02 will be teaching kindergarten next fall in South Haven. She, husband Lewis, and their four boys will relocate to South Haven as soon as construction on their home is finished.

Eren Martin-Beat ’03 is a marine biologist at Shark Reef Aquarium in Las Vegas. In addition, she works with intuitive children at Earth Angels Sanctuary & Learning Center, helping to develop their gifts and abilities. www.earthangelsnetwork.net

Cornel Hubbard ’04 graduated from the Southern University Law Center in Baton Rouge, La., with a Juris Doctor degree in May 2014. Cornel currently serves as the senior manager of Permanent Supportive Housing for the Louisiana Behavioral Health Partnership.

Lacy (Mohler) Cleveland ’05 received her Ph.D. in biological education from the University of Northern Colorado in May 2014. She began as a post-doctoral research fellow in July with the Math and Science Teaching Institute housed within the University of Northern Colorado.

Joseph Hamlett ’07 completed a doctorate in business administration (DBA) specializing in organizational leadership in May 2014 from Northcentral University, Prescott Valley, Ariz. Joseph was recently promoted to chief master sergeant (E-9) in the Missouri Air National Guard.

Hayley (Holthus) Stolze ’07 will be starting a Global HIV Prevention Fellowship with the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta. The fellowship begins in September 2014 and its focus is to help “partner countries” in sub-Saharan Africa develop and implement gender-based violence prevention programs to help prevent HIV.

Marcy Barton ’08 married Trent Ruxlow on March 15, 2014. Marci is a special education teacher for the McPherson USD 418 school district and Trent works at Hospira in McPherson.

Jessica (Bernhardt) Heidebrecht ’09 joined HDR, Inc., at the end of March as the marketing communications specialist. HDR is an architectural, engineering, and consulting firm. A global company with more than 8,500 employees, HDR is headquartered in Omaha.

Miwa Ishii ’09, theatre major from southern Japan, has worked since September 2013 at Eric Winterling, Inc., one of New York City’s top Broadway costume shops. As she completed her Master of Fine Arts degree in 2013 at the University of Tennessee, Miwa was chosen along with select MFA graduates from across the nation to display her portfolio at the Bohemian National Hall in New York City and at the National Design Portfolio Review. She was also recipient of the Southwestern Theatre Conference “Ready to Work Award,” and was selected by the United States Institute of Theatre Technology to present at the Young Technician’s Forum, and received the Young Designer’s Forum Award. Last summer Miwa worked at the Santa Fe Opera before beginning work in New York City, and this last February she designed costumes for Eugene O’Neill’s Anna Christie at the Triad Stage in Greensboro, N.C., where she was invited to return to design an original production in 2015.

Dallas Leonard ’09 was nominated and selected as a Top 10 Manager Under 30 “Young Gun” in the ski industry by Ski Area Management magazine. Dallas is the employee housing manager in the human resources division for Copper Mountain Resort in Colorado.

2010s

Jordan Stalder ’13 and Mark Eliott were married on April 26, 2014, in Manhattan, Kan. The Ellots are at home in Chapman.

Alyssa Zentner ’14, a certified athletic trainer, has moved to Jonesboro, Ark., and is currently studying to obtain her master’s in exercise science at Arkansas State University.

When a large tree at the northeast corner of Stewart Field House had to be removed, Jim ’71 and Deb ’71 Helmer (shown here with grandson Parker) thought the space needed a pick-me-up. So they donated a limestone rock embossed with the Jinx in honor of the cross country team, which Jim coached for 35 years until his retirement last spring.
