Under CONSTRUCTION

It hosted football games, track meets and commencement ceremonies. Originally built in 1947, Sonner Stadium was home to 62 years of wins, losses, coronations and graduation speeches. The beginning of the season brought cheers from the crowd while the end of the semester yielded jackhammers and caution tape. From a muddy hole behind Christy, we watched as the Richard L. Jantz stadium became a reality through winter storms and beautiful spring days. While foundations are erected on campus, we continue to build framework for our adult lives. We develop new thoughts and ideas about the world around us. As some of us are ending our journey, others are just beginning. Our lives are under construction.

Living TOGETHER

We leave our family, our friends and the place we used to call home to move to a campus smaller than some high schools. We embark on a journey of change, inching closer to the real world with every moment that passes. People we meet become like family. Places we have never been become places we never want to leave. The best experiences of our lives become treasured memories that we never want to forget. We share four years of eating in the cafeteria together, working on class projects, pulling all-nighters and partying on the weekends. It's not until we graduate that we realize that our time as a Builder is only just beginning. Our lives are under construction.

Graduate students receive colored hoods to represent the school and their degree. (K. Gomez)

Final FAREWELL

Graduates Bryce Johnson, business administration, and Stuart Mann, digital arts, bow their heads for the prayer during the third graduation commencement. Since the stadium was a construction zone this year, graduates participated in one of three ceremonies in Stewart Field House: The hooding ceremony for graduate students was at 1 p.m. The undergraduate ceremonies for B.A., B.S.N., B.G.S. and B.S. in natural sciences, and B.S. degrees were at 2:30 p.m. and 4:30 p.m. respectively. (P. Carswell/P. Carswell, page designer)

Left: David Gardner, assistant professor of music, leads the audience in singing the Alma Mater May 9 during the final graduation commencement. (S. Gillis) Below: John Richmond, sports management senior, hands his name card over to Andy Sheppard, dean of faculty, during the final ceremony. Richmond took part in the third commencement, which was at 4:30 p.m. (P. Carswell)

Uniting PERSONALITIES

Freshman year brings fear and excitement. We take comfort knowing that everyone has insecurities on move-in day, from who we are going to sit with on the bus to Builder Camp, to who we get stuck living with all semester. Eventually, we grow into our new environments and the individuals we meet bring diversity. The experiences we share and the journeys we take lead all roads back to SC. Through the years, we become united by movie nights, 8 a.m. classes and the roar of a purple storm at home games. Each experience helps construct the atmosphere at SC. We are all Builders working together to accomplish one goal. Without the people we have met, we would never change. We would never grow. Our lives are under construction.

Getting INVOLVED

It doesn't matter if you were the track star, the science whiz, or the soloist in the concert. It doesn't matter if you came from the biggest high school or the tiniest town. It doesn't matter if you were involved in lots of activities or you focused on your studies while holding down a job. Practicing at the driving range, picking up recycling, working at a fundraiser, planning campus events, rehearsing for the play, or participating on a mission trip is what kept students connected. These connections helped us adapt to new situations. Our lives are under construction.

Under CONSTRUCTION

As we finished our last final, packed up our belongings, sold back our textbooks and celebrated the end of another year, we looked back at the memories we made at SC. No more treks up the 77, eating in the caf, getting a replacement key for Cole Hall, or juggling time for friends and assignments. Some of us prepared to leave our college days behind to embark on new journeys in life, while others were grateful they survived one more year. After Sonner Stadium was dismantled, the mess and noise of construction became so common that we no longer noticed the changes. We passed the progress many times as we made our way to class, work, practice and to visit friends. The dirt has been moved, the cement has been poured and the changes have transformed us for our future as Builders. Our lives are under construction.
