BUILDING

It's a feeling. An opportunity.

Being a Builder allows you to build beyond.

BEYOND

community. An adventure.

and the normal college experience.

E College means late night runs to McDonalds. It means meeting people with completely different backgrounds and cultures than yourself. It means that you are still living young, wild and free, but that you are also making serious decisions that have the potential to affect the rest of your life. College is a scholarly whirlwind of word count, late night cramming sessions, labs and rehearsals. Yet despite all of the stress, anxiety and tears spilled over a bad grade here and there, college is what you make of it. It's about jumping feet first into this crazy, unpredictable, enthralling new experience.

BUILDER CAMP

1. Ed Loeb, professor of mathematics, urges the freshmen to cheer louder. Chants are a central part of Builder Camp because it brings the teams together and creates excitement and competition. (House) 2. Freshmen lift Frederick Patterson, psychology freshman, during a chant to show Builder pride. This year Builder Camp was at Sky Ranch Cave Springs in Northeastern Oklahoma. (House) 3. Kari Blattner, education freshman, runs through a tunnel of orientation leaders. Resident advisors and other upperclassmen are selected to serve as orientation leaders at Builder Camp. (House) 4. Victoria Lybarger, elementary education freshman, and Alex Ritzema, athletic training freshmen, participate in a team bonding activity. Each year freshman are split up into four teams: silver, white, black and purple, to compete during Builder Camp. (House) 5. Orrin Odegard, computer science freshman, prepares to take the last leg in the Builder Olympic team races. The team races are one of the last chances to earn points to win Builder Camp. (House) 6. Taylor Humphrey, business freshman, ziplines above the trees. Ziplining is one of the many activities that incoming Builders can enjoy at Sky Ranch Cave Springs. (House) 7. Nick Carlson, computer science junior, and Marci Diepenbrock, business junior, cheer on the freshmen as orientation leaders. Builder Camp is for incoming freshmen to bond, but it is also about the team getting acquainted with the orientation leaders. (House) 8. Seth Whitson, biology sophomore, jumps down on the "blob." He attended Builder Camp as an orientation leader. (House) 9. The Black Squad chants during Builder Olympics. Builder Camp lasts for three days, and during that, students are encouraged to bond with their teammates and fellow students. (House) 10. Taylor Ware, business management freshman, cools off in the water. At Builder Camp students can swim, jump on the blob, and hang out around the lake. (House) Page design by Taylor Forrest.

FALL FRENZY

1. Shawn Pancoast, accounting senior, and Michael Bell, psychology junior, stand arm in arm at the Rock Painting Party. Students provide their own rock, and campus life provides the paint and paintbrushes for students to use. (Stamper) 2. Bailey Collier, athletic training junior, and Blake Smith, athletic training senior, look at the 2015 Moundbuilder yearbooks at the rock painting party. Students paint rocks on the lawn of Wallingford to prepare for the Moundbuilding Ceremony. (Stamper) 3. Dalton Swindale, senior wide receiver, carries the ball past a defender in the game against Wayland Baptist. The football team lost the game to Wayland 5-42. (Gamez) 4. Maxwell Beaver, senior forward, dribbles the ball past two Bacone Warrior defenders. The men's soccer team ended their 2015 KCAC season with a 0-10 record. (Gamez) 5. The centerpiece of Fall Frenzy is the Moundbuilding Ceremony. The tradition began in 1927 when Dean Leroy Allen proposed the new custom to kick off the school year. (Gamez) 6. Seth Topham, biochemistry junior, diligently paints a rock. The Rock Painting party allows for teams and organizations to get together and bond. (Forrest) 7. Marci Diepenbrock, business junior, cheeses it up at Sunday Sundaes. SC Alumni and Institutional Advancement host Sunday Sundaes to welcome students back to campus. (Stamper) 8. Steve Kramer, assistant director for student success, participates at the rock painting party with his son, Gabriel. This was Kramer's first rock painting party. (Stamper) 9. Kiley Lott, marine biology freshman, Leslie Wofford, music education freshman, and Kara McLain, psychology freshman, line up with bowls at Sunday Sundaes. Students are given the opportunity to eat as much ice cream as they want. (Stamper) Page design by Taylor Forrest.

MOUND BUILDING CEREMONY

1. The football team pushes their huge rock onto the Mound at the Moundbuilding Ceremony. Each year, teams, organizations, faculty, staff and students are given the chance to paint a rock and take part in the tradition. (VenJohn) 2. Courtney Showalter, undecided freshman, Chelsea Hare, athletic training sophomore, Shirley Jones, business senior, Ashlynn Showalter, marine biology sophomore, Quinlan Stein, history freshman, Jessica Arnoldy, chemistry senior, and Cierra Ross, English junior, pose together at the Moundbuilding Ceremony. The dance and cheer team joined this year to form one spirit squad. (Gamez) 3. Alejandra Palacios, marine biology senior, and Megan Walentynowicz, secondary education senior gently place the softball rock on the Mound. The first Moundbuilding Ceremony took place in 1927. (Gamez) 4. Anthony Barazza, business administration senior, and Stephen Stogner, computer science and digital arts senior, toss the League of Legends rock onto the Mound. As more rocks are stacked upon the Mound, it is supposed to signify and represent the depth of the Builder Family. (Stamper) 5. Allyson Moon, director of the theatre program, and Roger Moon, associate professor of theatre and speech, speak at the opening of the Moundbuilding Ceremony. In 1962, the Mound was moved from the top of the hill to its permanent location at the bottom of the 77 steps. (Stamper) Page design by Taylor Forrest

APRIL

1. Haley Porter, marine biology senior, high fives her fellow teammates at the last home tennis meet. The team was wearing “We Fight for Haley” t-shirts in honor of Porter, who was diagnosed with thyroid cancer at the beginning of her senior year. (House) 2. Turki Alturki, communication freshman, Fahad Al Shaiban, computer science freshman, and Nathan Clements, ESL program coordinator, pose together at the Cultural Cuisine Dinner. This year the Cultural Cuisine Dinner featured a “top chef” competition where students participated in a cook-off. (Forrest) 3. Luke Nicolay, performance senior, sings a solo in the song “Fly to Paradise” at the spring choir concert. The concert was one of many fine arts performances during inauguration weekend. (Stamper) 4. Gina Belt, education senior, works at the annual blood drive that the Athletic Training Education Program hosts. This year, the annual blood-drive collected 27 pints of blood. (House) 5. Cheryl Rude, associate professor of leadership studies and director of Leadership Southwestern, accepts an award at the employee recognition reception. Rude was recognized for her 25 years of service to Southwestern. (Dunning) 6. Matt Porter, musical theatre freshman, plays violin at the John McCutcheon Symphony. The South Kansas Symphony joined McCutcheon for the second half of the performance to play back-up for his songs. 7. Cameron Hunt, physical education freshman, and Brent Smith, physical education freshman, race against each other in an inflatable obstacle course. The obstacle course was part of StuFu’s Clash of Classes competition. (VenJohn) 8. Bailey Collier, athletic training junior, and Shayla Jordan, religion and philosophy freshman, clean out the flower beds by Stewart Fieldhouse. On Assessment Day, students tidied up around campus as a chapel service project. (Stamper) Page design by Taylor Forrest.

Inspirational Insight

"When my time here is done, and I hand off the college to another president, I hope people will say that President Andrews loved Southwestern, and he left it in better shape than when he first stepped foot on campus."-President Brad Andrews

DEDICATION

ON

Builders are involved. They don't exclusively fit into one category. An athlete might also be an SGA representative, or a musician in the symphony might also be a student journalist. It's just a fact that Builders tend to be overbooked, overloaded and overinvolved, but they pull it off because they rely on one factor to keep them going: dedication.

Southwestern provides students with unique experiences, challenges them to embrace a dedicated lifestyle, and ties classmates together in a family bond. You had the opportunity to go college anywhere in the world, but you chose Winfield. You chose to build beyond the normal college experience, and for that you have come to call this place, this campus, home.
