Dear friends,

Several weeks ago I was interviewed for the article that is on pages 6 and 7 of this issue of The Southwesterner. I knew it would be the first impression many of you would have of your new president, so I wanted to make sure you knew how genuinely honored, and truly delighted, I am to be that person. I've been in Winfield for more than two full months now, and I'm beginning to get a handle on some first impressions of my own.

I've been impressed, for example, by the passion and enthusiasm of Southwestern's students. If you have not been at Moundbuilding ceremony in a few years, I encourage you to note the date on your calendar for next year – it's worth a trip to campus. My family and I watched in amazement Aug. 20 as hundreds of students, faculty, staff, alumni, and friends gathered for an hour-long ceremony pledging and renewing our loyalty to SC. During that time our new and returning Moundbuilders were focused, undistracted by either electronics or the beautiful evening weather. We listened to Dean Allen's speech and explanations of Southwestern traditions before we put our rocks on the Mound; we linked arms and swayed as we sang the "Alma Mater," and most of the students, even the freshmen, knew the words by heart.

I can assure you that this isn't the pattern at most colleges. This is a special place.

I've been impressed, too, by the determination of our faculty, staff and administrative leaders to keep Southwestern intensely focused on the business, the calling, of preparing students for lives of meaning and success. Whether on campus or in Professional Studies, those for whom Southwestern is a career calling are inspiring professionals. They are fully committed, and always actively engaged, in helping each student identify and reach their full potential.

This, too, is not always the case in higher education. This is an outstanding educational environment.

Finally, I've been impressed by the devotion and love Southwestern's alumni have for the school. One of my joys during the early weeks has been getting on the road to meet folks who have known the college for many decades. To a person, these graduates have been wonderful ambassadors for the school that has meant so much to them. They appreciate the special role SC has in their lives, and the role it can play in the lives of others.

This dedication to one's alma mater is unusually strong. This is an amazing college.

My first impressions of Southwestern College have been overwhelming and moving. While we are not exempt from the challenges facing all of higher education, this is undeniably a special place. With complete sincerity, great pride, and genuine enthusiasm, I am delighted to serve Southwestern College.

Best regards,

Brad Andrews, President

Clark to lead Southwestern admission, financial aid

President Brad Andrews announced Aug. 26 that Dean T. Clark will be the new vice president for enrollment at Southwestern College. Clark is currently vice president for enrollment at Carthage College in Kenosha, Wisc., and will begin his duties Oct. 1.

“Dean was on campus recently and was extremely impressed with the Builder spirit and potential for growth in our enrollment,” says President Andrews. “This year he and his staff brought in Carthage’s largest-ever freshman class and total enrollment. Dean is a congenial and hard-working colleague, and he is excited about improving Southwestern’s on-campus numbers.”

Clark is a graduate of Carthage, where he received his bachelor’s degree in criminal justice. He also earned an MBA from Loyola University in Chicago. After several years as an investment specialist for Charles Schwab in Florida, Illinois, and Wisconsin, he returned to Carthage as director of admissions and financial aid in 2002. He was promoted to associate vice president for admissions in 2008, and became vice president for enrollment in 2011.

In his most recent position Clark has been responsible for a staff of 19 professionals, with oversight of admission, financial aid, and retention efforts.

This year Carthage was expected to have its largest freshman class in history as well as the largest total enrollment (2,640 students) ever.

Clark has taken a key role in collaborations between the admission office and the campus community. These collaborations have included a revamped honors program, a new branding and communication plan, development of new majors, and development of academic visit days for prospective students.

A historian and editor have teamed to produce a history of Southwestern College as part of Arcadia Publishing’s college series. Jerry Wallace and Pamela S. Thompson are authors of Southwestern College, a 128-page book that will be available beginning Nov. 16.

Wallace is a historian and writer based in Oxford, Kan., who has served as an archivist for both the National Archives and Records Administration and for Southwestern College. Thompson is a writer, editor, journalist, and teacher who grew up in Lincoln, Neb., and is currently an adjunct English and communications instructor at SC. The book is available for pre-order at moundbuildermarket.com.

SCPS launches center to develop business talent

By Jessica DeVader
PS Public Relations & Social Media Coordinator

Since opening its doors in the early 1990s, Southwestern College Professional Studies has developed partnerships with business and industry to offer specialized training for working adults. Now those efforts have resulted in the launching of the Center for Corporate Learning (CCL), which will offer customized training and talent development programs designed specifically for the unique needs of area businesses and organizations.

“As industries are becoming more competitive, organizations will find that investing in talent development will give them an edge,” says Denise Sherman, CCL. “The Center for Corporate Learning is positioned to support their talent development through customized training offerings.”

Organizations interested in finding out more about the services CCL offers can schedule an appointment to conduct a needs assessment. A gap analysis will determine what training is necessary. The final step in the process will consist of CCL experts determining the mechanism through which training will be administered.

“Our clients determine the best method of delivery for training,” says Sherman. “CCL trainers can conduct sessions at the client’s location or at our Professional Studies facility in east Wichita. And with Southwestern College being a leader in online education, we are capable of teaching the courses online as well.”

The Center for Corporate Learning has experienced, accomplished industry trainers who hold credentials including industry certifications and advanced degrees.

“We have a high standard for our trainers,” explains Sherman. “They are knowledgeable experts with hands-on experience.”

Along with customized training courses, CCL began offering industry certification preparatory courses in fall 2015. The first being offered is a seven-week PHR/SPHR certification preparatory course for human resource professionals which began on Sept. 12. Others offered at a later date will include project management, Lean Six Sigma, and contract administration. There are also plans to offer continuing education for health care, human resource, and project management fields.

“We are hitting the ground running with our human resource prep course and we have others like it being planned for the near future,” says Sherman. “We look forward to being the go-to institution for businesses when it comes to educating and strengthening their workforces.”

More information about CCL can be found at <http://ps.sckans.edu/center-corporate-learning>

Generations of Builders continue

A high school graduation party in Wichita was a good time for two Southwestern College families to mark the transition from one Builder generation to the next.

This photo shot at Julianna Smarsh’s high school graduation includes four Moundbuilder generations of the Rymph family and two Moundbuilder generations of Snell/McLains.

Seated on the swing are Kara McLain (SC freshman), Rev. Albert Rymph ’49 (holding photo of Levi and Jessie (Hershey) Rymph ’23 ’23), and Julianna Smarsh (SC freshman). Standing in back are Karen (Rymph) Smarsh ’80, Debbie Snell (attended ’77-’80), Rev. Barbara (Snell) McLain ’78, and Dr. Allen McLain ’74.

Karen’s siblings, Brad Rymph ’77 and Carol (Rymph) Carlson ’79, and Allen McLain’s siblings (Robert and Kathleen) attended SC as well.

Jessie Hershey and Levi Rymph met at SC, fell in love, graduated in 1923, and were married shortly after graduating from SC, says Karen Smarsh, who is their granddaughter.

“If I remember the family story correctly, Jessie’s father purchased a home in Winfield and the four Hershey sisters lived there,” Karen explains. “Each year three of the Hershey sisters would attend SC while the fourth sister worked. The four girls took turns being the working sister, funding the education of the three others.”

“Barb, Debbie, and I became friends at SC and that friendship has deepened to a tight bond over the years. It delights us that Kara (studying psychology and music) and Julianna (studying accounting) are solid friends and decided to be roommates in Cole Hall this fall,” Karen adds.

Aquaria will restore tranquility in Beech lobby

When Beech Science Center was dedicated in January 1998 the aesthetic and symbolic centerpiece of the building was a set of five aquaria in the main floor lobby. The huge tanks were filled with fish representing different eco-zones and the spot quickly became a must-see point for campus visitors and a calming presence for the science students who spend most of their college years in this building.

By the time biology major Julie Fuquay '15 was a freshman, though, only a couple of the tanks were still in operation. The octagonal design had been prone to leaks and plumbing access problems, and all but two had been drained; by her sophomore year all were dry. Instead of being an attraction, the lobby was an eyesore.

At Homecoming 2015, the Beech aquariums will be up and running again, a product of Fuquay's senior Leadership project. They will be dedicated Friday, Oct. 16, in a 3:30 p.m. ceremony in Beech.

"I didn't know anything about aquariums when I started," Fuquay admits. "I wanted to do this regardless of it being my senior project, but having it be a Leadership project was great because there were steps Cheryl (Rude) had us take no matter what the project was."

One of those steps was an entire semester of research, working with biology professor Pat Ross to determine the best way to build an installation that was affordable and durable. Then Julie contacted development officer Charles McKinzie, who worked with her on fund raising for the $15,500 project. By the time she graduated in May Southwestern had raised $14,200 toward the goal, and final donations are being sought for an endowment that will ensure maintenance for the aquaria.

The new tanks are designed to be more long-lasting, but they will continue to have a variety of occupants. Regional diversity will include fresh water species from Kansas, South America, North America, and Africa.

"People want to invest in projects that are meaningful, and these aquariums are meaningful for science alums," Julie adds. "We loved watching the turtles before exams, and the sound of filtration adds a tranquil environment. I'm excited for students and future students to have this in their lives."

Julie Fuquay '15 (right) galvanized action to restore the Beech lobby aquaria, researching the project and helping raise funds for the new fish tanks. The aquaria will be dedicated during Homecoming.

A two-week trip to China in May was a cultural and educational experience for a delegation from Southwestern College. Made up largely of representatives from the business and education divisions, the group used the time to familiarize themselves with the Chinese educational system, and to form alliances with officials at Huangshan University and Guangzhou University.

"Our trip was successful in that we accomplished our mission of forming agreements and alliances between the universities and SC," says Debbie McAllister, MBA program director. "We will be working more effectively at exchanging faculty and students to help each other become more internationally diverse. Our MBA program at SC is now offering a course in globalization with an emphasis on doing business in China and we hope to have a visiting scholar from Huangshan to help teach the course."

Following the trip ESL coordinator Nathan Clements stayed in China to teach an English language course to 68 students in the tourism and hospitality program at Huangshan University, and MBA student Anthony Barraza enrolled in language and culture classes there.

The Southwestern College family is not just a family by affection – often the family is related by genetics and marriage as well. Robert and Wendy (Reiser) Richardson '87 '87 are good examples of this, with a family tree that not only goes back to the college's earliest graduating classes in the late 1890s, but stretches forward to the class of 2015.

Rob and Wendy met at SC, as did Rob's paternal grandparents (Lerland Hyndman and Carl Richardson).

Wendy submitted a list of family members with Builder connections, and says this may not even be an exhaustive compilation. Besides the relatives on the tree, check out these who graduated from or attended SC:

- Elvira Williams (1890s) | Wendy's Great-Great Aunt
- John Armstrong Rule (late 1890s) | Wendy's Great-Great Uncle
- John Henry Dayton Williams (late 1890s) | Wendy's Great-Great Uncle
- Phyllis Marie Williams (1926) | Wendy's Third Cousin
- Nellie Grace Williams (1902) | Wendy's Great-Great Aunt
- William Clyde Ross (late 1890s) | Wendy's Great Uncle
- Nina Marie Williams (early 1900s) | Wendy's Great Aunt
- Earl Hicks Teagarden (early 1900s) | Wendy's Great Uncle
- Everett James Williams (early 1910s) | Wendy's Great Uncle
- Ethel Weakley Williams (early 1910s) | Wendy's Great Grandmother
- Inez Weakley Hittle (1910s) | Wendy's Great Aunt
- Lorraine Grace Williams (early 1930s) | Wendy's Great Aunt
- Lawrence Richardson '31 | Rob's Great Uncle
- Irlene (Moore) Richardson '31 | Rob's Great Aunt
- Grace Hyndman (House Mother at Smith Hall) '40s | Rob's Great-Grandmother
- Maybelle Casburn (House Mother at Holland Hall) '40s | Rob's Great-Aunt
- James Richardson '68 | Rob's Second Cousin

New president takes on 'sacred obligation'

Brad Andrews

was a sophomore at the University of Missouri when he realized that a college campus is, as he describes it, “the best place on earth.” He was living across the hall from another student who was highly involved in university activities, and that residence hall friendship opened his eyes to the opportunities that surrounded him. With this realization, the former journalism major says, he began to major in higher education.

“I am an idealist and an optimist and a romantic, and that’s why higher education is my calling and my vocation,” he explains. “It is a sacred obligation we have to graduate people who are confident, caring, kind-hearted, and courageous.”

Andrews also is a marathon runner, one who has completed nearly a dozen marathons and describes himself as “not fast but determined.”

On July 1, he became the 19th president of Southwestern College.

“I am an idealist and an optimist and a romantic, and that’s why higher education is my calling and my vocation,” he explains. “It is a sacred obligation we have to graduate people who are confident, caring, kind-hearted, and courageous.”

Andrews’s path to Southwestern began in Bloomington, Ind., where he was the oldest of six brothers. Although his extended family still lives in the Bloomington area, between second grade and his graduation from high school his family moved several times (including a stretch in Puerto Rico) before returning to the St. Louis area right after he graduated from high school in Miami. He enrolled at the university just down the road, the University of Missouri.

A year into his college career, at just about the same time he realized that he was not cut out for journalism, a residence hall friend encouraged him to become more involved in campus life. He joined student government, became chair of the student activities group, an RA in the dorm, a peer educator, a student orientation leader – he was the guy everyone called when they wanted something accomplished in student life.

And even though he graduated from Mizzou, Andrews never graduated from higher education. He worked in residence life while he was earning his master’s degree at Drake, in housing at the University of New Hampshire, in residence life and housing operations at Case Western.

Then in 1999 Andrews joined the administration of Carthage College in Kenosha, Wisc. It was at Carthage that he honed the wide-ranging skills he will need as president of Southwestern: He headed every major administrative function of the institution, and took on roles as dean of students, vice president for enrollment and student life, and senior vice president for academic resources. For two years he was simultaneously the chief enrollment officer, the chief development officer, the senior student affairs office, and the person providing oversight for the marketing and communications functions of the college. During this period, enrollment continued to increase, the academic reputation of the college continued to rise, and fund raising results were accelerated after the national economic crisis.

Which of these roles is his favorite?

Andrews laughs when he’s asked that question.

“I have a special place in my heart for all of them,” he says. “I grew up in student affairs and student life, so a big part of my identity is in that.”

Each of those roles, though, was preparing him to lead Southwestern. When Dick Merriman finished 17 years as the college’s president, Andrews quickly rose to the top of the candidates for the position. He read up on the college and researched every way he could, accepting an invitation with his wife, Trisha, to visit Winfield as a finalist. They arrived in town in early evening.

“(Search committee chair) Mike Lewis drove us down College Street just as the sun was going down,” he recalls. “We looked up the 77 Steps to Christy and there was that golden glow of sunset that shines on Christy some days, and all I could think was ‘What a cool place.’”

The next day Brad and Trisha spent hours on and off campus, talking with every segment of the Southwestern family. Every interaction deepened their conviction that this was the right place for them.

“Then the next day, Steve McSpadden was driving us to the airport and on the way out of town he stopped at the stoplight at 9th and Main,” Andrews remember. “I could look down toward Island Park and imagine our girls playing there, and it made me realize what an idyllic place and setting this was. Every single hour we spent in town was affirmation of our decision that we would take the job if it was offered.”

Less than two months later he had moved into the presidential office.

“I had a chance to sit down with Dick Merriman and I asked him what the essence of Southwestern College was,” President Andrews says now. “Dick is a wise man, and his answer was that this institution is a westward-facing institution. At the core of Southwestern is a pioneering spirit, a spirit of adventure and of taking on challenges with perseverance and hard work.”

Brad and Trisha Andrews both have spent their professional lives in higher education.

Trisha began her career working in student affairs and career services at small private colleges, then became director of academic advising at the College of Lake County in Grayslake, Ill. She also has a master's degree in history, and taught U.S. history courses.

This does not mean that the institution does not continue to be challenged. Higher education is seeing tough times throughout the nation, Andrews points out. Still, he is unfazed by these challenges.

“It’s clear to me that at SC we have enormous strength and potential,” the president says. “While this is a difficult times in a lot of way in higher ed, SC is uniquely positioned and blessed that our strengths set us up well to succeed. What is exciting is that we have the opportunity and ability, by focusing on becoming the best version of ourselves in genuine and sincere ways, to stand out on a state and regional level as a college that provides the very best education for its students.”

It can only become that “best version,” he says, by focusing on what is best about Southwestern.

Many schools are trying to be all things to all students, or trying to catch the next big wave in education, Andrews adds. Southwestern’s niche is genuinely building relationships with each Moundbuilder and helping that student develop personal potential – “and we do that by caring, teaching, learning, and accompanying them on their life journeys.”

“It is a sacred obligation we have as educators,” he says. “I would like to think that my legacy could be that I left the world a better place, and the most powerful way to do that is through education, graduating people who are confident, caring, kind-hearted, and courageous.

“I can’t imagine a more amazing, fulfilling, and important place to be.”

He also co-led a three-day Transformational Teaching and Conducting workshop on SC’s campus, and will guest conduct the Pioneer League Middle School Honor Choir, and the South Central Kansas Music Educators Association Region Women’s Honor Choir in Wichita.

Gleason Honored

Cheryl Gleason ’76 (left) was honored July 1 by the National Federation of State High School Associations as a 2015 National Citation Award recipient. The award was presented at the annual NFHS meeting in New Orleans.

The NFHS Citation is awarded to persons who have made contributions and an impact to the NFHS, state high school associations, athletic director and coaching professions, the officiating avocation, and fine arts/performing arts programs. The NFHS Citation is one of the most highly regarded achievements in high school athletics and performing arts.

Gleason is in her 26th year as an assistant executive director at the Kansas State High School Activities Association (KSHSAA). She directs the Kansas Association for Youth program (Kays & Kayettes) and serves as the association’s administrator for the girls gymnastics and volleyball programs and the boys and girls bowling, golf and tennis programs.

Gleason also was inducted into the Kansas Volleyball Association Hall of Fame in June 2015. She serves on the Board of Trustees of Southwestern College.
