FROM THE PRESIDENT

Dear friends,

What a time, what a college! April and May have included a flurry of special events at Southwestern College. In one three-week span, we had a presidential inauguration, four Hall of Fame ceremonies, and Commencement weekend.

While the college was busy hosting these wonderful events, our students were also busy impressing all of us. Our Enactus team participated in national competitions, our Moundbuilder teams were named runners-up for the KCAC Commissioner's Cup denoting overall 2015-16 athletic success, and that's not even mentioning the hundreds of academic activities that wrap up during this time.

What a year it has been. As students have scattered for their summer activities, I think back on this three-week flurry of activity with great fondness.

During those weeks in April and May, I officially accepted the joy and challenge of the Southwestern College presidency, promising to "discharge with zeal and integrity the duties of president of Southwestern College, remembering always the vision entrusted to me and the people I serve." I saw the completion of a full academic year at the college, and appreciated the rhythms of the seasons. And I grew to love even more this college on a hill, our college, where I proudly call myself a Moundbuilder.

I can't wait to see what's coming next.

Best regards,

Brad Andrews, President

ADMINISTRATION VIEWPOINT

When I first came to SC, Cole Hall didn't exist, Beech Science Center hadn't been built, the stadium and library were run down, and President Carl Martin had just started Professional Studies. A lot has changed over the years and the campus looks great!

Some things never change, however. The faculty are excellent and they still care deeply about the students and their education. As I prepare to leave for my new home in Georgia, I do so with the confidence that SC's spirit of academic excellence will continue. Indeed, Tracy Frederick is stepping into the role of interim provost and will do a great job. She came to SC at the start of my second year and I know her deep commitment to teaching and learning very well.

So whether you were shaped by Doc Wimmer and A.D. Cope or Steve Rankin and Cheryl Rude, you can rest assured that the tradition of great Moundbuilder educational experience will continue.

Sincerely,

Andy Sheppard, Provost

Administrative changes bring transition in leadership of Southwestern College

Shelton new AD, Frederick interim provost

Changes in the top administrative positions of two major divisions of the college are bringing new leadership to Southwestern College.

The duties of Provost Andy Shepard, who has accepted the presidency of Thomas University in Georgia, will be filled on an interim basis by Tracy Frederick, and Matt Shelton has been named athletic director.

Frederick, professor of communication at Southwestern College, will become interim provost July 1. She will serve in this top academic position during a national search for a permanent provost.

“Dr. Frederick is a capable and experienced faculty member who will be able to help us through a scheduled accreditation as well as giving us time to do a full national search,” said President Brad Andrews.

Frederick has been on the faculty since 1998 and has served in all offices (including chair) of the Faculty Senate. She was a member of the General Education Task Force which restructured the general education program, and has served on every faculty committee. In addition, Frederick is a respected academician who has published consistently and presented at numerous conferences.

The president expects the comfortable time frame will attract top candidates while giving the college experienced leadership as it completes an accreditation visit by the Higher Learning Commission in 2017.

“I am confident we will have strong interest in this position, and I am comforted to know that we have a very strong academic affairs leadership team of deans and division chairs to work with Dr. Frederick and ultimately with the new provost,” he adds.

After an extensive national search, Matt Shelton was named athletic director in February. Previously associate athletic director at Graceland (Iowa) University, Shelton took over SC’s top athletic administration job April 1. Shelton later announced the promotion of Scott Nuss ’07 to assistant athletic director.

“Those who have worked closely with Matt over the past many years describe numerous strengths, but invariably laud his strength of character and his focus on others, colleagues as well as students,” says President Andrews. “I am excited about the experience, professionalism, enthusiasm, and dedication Matt brings to our athletic department, and our campus.”

An NAIA school of about 1,100 students, Graceland hosts 21 varsity sports and recently added wrestling and bowling to its offerings.

“I am honored to be selected as the next athletic director at Southwestern College,” Shelton says. “As my wife and I have searched for the right fit for our family during the last few years it became very evident that my passion was in collegiate athletics because of the opportunity to impact the lives of those around me, and to repay the impact athletics have had on my own life.”

Since Shelton became an athletics administrator in 2011 Graceland athletes earned 134 Academic All-America designations while its sports programs maintained a cumulative GPA of 3.0 or better.

Shelton graduated from Graceland 2001 and has a master of science in sport management from California University of Pennsylvania. He began his career as a junior and senior high school special education teacher. He also coached golf and basketball, and was serving as athletic director at Lamoni Community Schools when he was asked to return to his alma mater as sports information director. He led the marketing and branding campaigns in the Graceland athletic department for seven years, combining these responsibilities with the role of assistant athletic director in 2011.

For the past two years he had been interim/associate athletic director, supervising 40 full- and part-time employees. In addition to setting the long-term vision for GU athletics, budgetary responsibilities, and department-wide recruiting initiatives, Shelton has worked extensively with institutional advancement personnel as they look to complete a $5 million project for gymnasium renovation and an outdoor practice facility.

Shelton and his wife, Amber, are parents of three children – Hailey, 12; Trevor, 9; and Molly, 5.

Shelton announced the promotion of Nuss to assistant athletic director in early May. Nuss served as the interim athletic director, along with Mike Kirkland, for much of the 2015-16 school year at Southwestern.

Nuss was named the first full-time sports information director at Southwestern College in July 2012. He had an immediate impact on communicating Moundbuilder athletics information.

The department’s social media presence reached all-time highs in his first two years in Winfield, and Nuss was named the Kansas Collegiate Athletic Conference Sports Information Director of the Year in 2013 and 2015.

Nuss returned to Southwestern from NCAA Div. II Newman University where he served a three-year stint as the school’s first full-time sports information director. While at Newman he was twice named the Heartland Conference Sports Information Director of the Year.

Butterfly Garden

The Southwestern College Green Team has funded, designed, and planted a butterfly garden on the south side of the Beech Science Center at Southwestern College. The project was completed with financial backing and assistance from Southwestern College alumni Jason Speegle '99, Ken Kraus '79, Jonathan Leeper '07, Alex Gottlob '09, and the Rick and Sue (Kraus) '73 Ferree family.

The butterfly garden will serve several functions, according to Gottlob. “The idea of bringing this butterfly garden to SC is two-fold,” Gottlob says. “First, this will be a benefit to the plants and animals, specifically pollinators like bees and butterflies. Secondly it will serve as a site for education and awareness for all students in the area to learn about pollinators and butterflies. We hope all visitors including, professors and their students, can benefit from having this as a learning site.”

Receiving special recognition at an April 15 gathering of faculty and staff were (l. to r.) Susan Lowe, Fasnacht Outstanding Administrator (campus); Terah York, Builder Spirit Award; Stephen Woodburn, Fasnacht Outstanding Faculty; Kathy Mignone, SGA Staff Citation; Jeremy Kirk, United Methodist Exemplary Teacher; Carrie Lane, SGA Faculty Citation; and Eloy Mendoza, Fasnacht Outstanding Administrator (Professional Studies).

Lee receives college's top faculty award

Patrick Lee, assistant professor of accounting, was chosen to receive Southwestern College's most prestigious faculty award, the Charles H. and Verda R. Kopke Teaching Award, at Commencement 2016. However, imminent storms forced shortening of the graduation ceremony and Lee was unable to give his prepared remarks. They are presented here in abbreviated form.

Thank you, President Andrews, for this distinguished honor. I would also like to thank Charles and Verda Kopke for bestowing this honor not only on myself but also on the distinguished faculty with whom I get to work each and every day. As you know, the Kopke award was established to recognize members of the college's faculty who exemplify the college's commitment to excellence in teaching. At Southwestern College, this is what we do. We teach, we inspire, we find every opportunity to challenge the status quo.

I'm originally from Los Angeles, where I obtained my undergraduate degree just eight years ago from the University of La Verne in La Verne, Calif. After getting my accounting degree, I went to work for one of the largest accounting firms in the world, Deloitte & Touche, LLP. Then at age 23, I became one of the youngest CPA firm owners in the state of California. But when I was a senior at the University of La Verne, my faculty advisor had strongly suggested that I go into teaching. As a young individual who thought he knew everything, I said

"Maybe when I'm retired." Looking back, she was right.

So that brings me to Southwestern College. A lot of people ask, "Why are you in Kansas?" My response is always the same. I came here for the opportunity to work and no matter where I am, no matter what I'm doing, I always find appreciation in the things I "get to do." It's not about what job you take (I worked at Taco Bell in high school and loved it). It's not about where you live (in California, where we all walk around in shorts and a t-shirt, there aren't tornados, and it's always 75 degrees). It's not about the degree you will hold (I have a master's degree in human environmental sciences, whatever that means). It's also not about leaving what you love to do behind (after 13 years I'm still a camp and competition director for one of the largest cheer and dance organizations on the West Coast).

No, the most important thing is your perspective, your mindset, your willingness to work extremely hard. It's the difference between just existing or living to your potential.

My students will tell you: I send them though the wringer and when I'm done, I do it all over again. At the end of the day, they know – it isn't about where you are from, where you will work, or where you will take your next educational step. It is truly about how you see things.

I don't refer to myself as a faculty member, or even a professor. I'm often mistakenly called "Dr. Lee," but I don't have a doctoral degree. (If I had a dollar for every time I had been called "Dr.," I'd be able to buy tickets to a Garth Brooks show.) In my mind I truly am a business professional. Of course, some days I feel like a business executive with 4 a.m. wake-up times and 16-hour days. The truly amazing thing, though, is that I am a business professional who happens to teach, and that is all about perspective. And who decides what perspective to take? You do. You decide what your next chapter in your life will say. You will decide what blank pages you are going to fill with ink and what pages you will leave blank. It's not a secret, teachers don't like blank pages – they just take up unneeded space.

Now I could end on that, but let's be honest, today it's not about me. It's about the young men and women who invest their lives in ours. Today, we celebrate not me, but you. So, to take the attention off myself and put it on my students, I would like to thank my accounting and Enactus seniors who lived to tell another tale and help me become a better "teacher." Congratulations on this achievement, but if I hear that you left a page blank, I might have to come after you.

Thank you for this honor and whatever you do in the future, keep your perspective.

Enactus takes regional title in second year

The Southwestern College Enactus team has been crowned regional champions, as they competed in Atlanta, Ga., regional competition March 30-April 2. They earned the opportunity to compete at the 2016 Enactus United States National Exposition in St. Louis May 15-18.

"This is the second year the SC Enactus team has been in existence and to move on to the National Expo is a big deal. We couldn't do it without our very dedicated team of students and advisors," says Patrick Lee, Southwestern College Enactus team advisor.

Lee adds that the Enactus regional and national events aren't just about competition, but also are about network and career development with students interacting with Fortune 500 companies such as Coca-Cola, Pepsi, CVS, Avis Budget Group, and many more. Students have a chance to network with representatives from companies and earn internships or jobs at these events.

"Raul Martinez made a networking contact with Dexter Mack, a representative from Mondelez International (they make Oreos and other snacks). Mr. Mack is going to try to get Raul an internship this summer in Houston," Lee says. "Another student randomly sat next to someone at lunch who happened to be from a company that the student had applied to on the West Coast. They exchanged information and although this student has several other career opportunities, this contact expands his network greatly."

Moundbuilder MARKET

Among the projects undertaken by the Enactus team has been administration of the Moundbuilder Market, the college's branded gear store. In addition to the campus store in the lower level of the Roy L. Smith Student Union, the enterprise moves to special events on campus and sets up temporary quarters in such facilities as Stewart Field House and outside Richardson Performing Arts Center. Students manage the operation and proceeds help finance group expenses.

Southwestern College, a history by Jerry L. Wallace and Pamela S. Thompson, will be for sale through the summer in the Moundbuilder Market, and the authors will be selling and signing books again during Homecoming weekend Oct. 7, 8, 9, 2016. During the summer the book is available at the special price of $12.99.

To purchase online, visit moundbuildermarket.com.

During the 2016 baccalaureate service campus minister Ben Hanne reflected on Southwestern's motto. Lux Esto has been commonly translated to mean "Let there be light," he told attendees, but a more accurate translation would be "Become light." This, he said, is an appropriate charge for Southwestern's new graduates.

ENGAGING Beauty

The following is excerpted from the inaugural remarks of President Bradley J. Andrews on April 14, 2016. The full address can be heard at sckans.edu/inauguration, and begin at the 1:00:05 point of the inauguration video.)

If higher education provides nothing else, accomplishes no other outcome, we must create in our students an unfailing and all-powerful ability to seek, find, and engage beauty. Let's explore beauty for a moment, in the two ways that matter most here.

There is the beauty out there, the beauty in the world. It is the beauty of poets and artists, of nature and music. This is the beauty that enlarges our heart. It increases our capacity for love and develops our ability to patiently and persistently search for truth.

Then there is the beauty that exists within each of us, buried deep inside. This is the beauty which brings us closer together, which offers promise and pathways to solving (not just avoiding, but solving) the problems of the world today.

The first type of beauty requires patience and attention and time. The second type requires hard work, sacrifice, even painful compromise. We need the first type of beauty to ensure our hearts and humanity grow and advance at a rate equal to technological advances and increases in socio-political complexity. We need the second type of beauty to address our issues, to bring us closer together, to solve our problems, to advance our civilization.

I propose that the greatest gift in the world – the single greatest gift in the world – is the ability to find the beauty inside of others and inspire them accordingly. This is education.

We must create in our students an unfailing and all-powerful ability to seek, to find, and to engage beauty. This is the greatest purpose of a small, private college education today.

Seldom has the beauty of Southwestern College been as evident as it was during the events celebrating the inauguration of Dr. Bradley J. Andrews as its 19th president on April 14, 2016. Spring sunshine lit a tree planting (with participation by the entire Andrews family), and flowers bloomed across campus. Special events included an inauguration chapel, a photo exhibit by First Lady Trish Andrews, a Wall of Well Wishes sponsored by students, and the conferring of the presidential medal by Dr. David Smith, chair of the Board of Trustees.

Etcyl '47 and Ruth (Gross) Blair '47 moved from Midland, Mich., to their new home in Grand Rapids, and were surprised with a pre-move “flash mob” block party given by the Midland Symphony Orchestra and their neighbors of the home where they lived for 57 years. The Blairs have been very involved with the symphony and the community throughout the time they lived in Midland, but moved to be closer to their family.

Mike Cargill '77, science teacher at Stafford High School, is trying to help his students solve the world's hunger problems. It started with constructing a greenhouse and the implementation of aquaponics – an aquaculture where the waste produced by fish is used to create nutrients for plants. Without using any chemicals, fertilizers, or pesticides, the fish are fed worms grown in the greenhouse. Those fish supply nutrients for plants grown hydroponically, which in turn, purify the water. Cargill's students are working on ways to grow multiple plants from a single seed and are experimenting with meal worms – conducting experiments on how they eat many of the things found in landfills.

Barb (Meier) '79 and Marcus Mayfield were married in January 2016. She is currently an all-day kindergarten teacher in Gold Beach, Ore., where living by the ocean inspires her poetic abilities. During the past year, Barb has had poems published 17 times in anthologies and literary journals online such as Poetry Pacific, Miller's Pond Journal, deLuge, Cacti Fur, Ancient Paths Online, River Poets Journal, Poetry and Place Anthology Series, Poeming Pigeon, Metonym, The Greensilk Journal, and Happy Holidays Anthology.

After playing linebacker for SC, he went on to become the coach at Saginaw Valley State, Emporia State, Southern Illinois, Northern Illinois, and Minnesota. The Epilepsy Foundation also recognized Kill on April 15 as the 2016 Hero of Epilepsy. The award is presented each year to celebrate exceptional leaders who have made an impact in the epilepsy community.

Jackie Glasgow, assistant professor of education at Southwestern College, lives in Wellington and is currently serving her first year as a school board member for Wellington USD 353. She commented that her first year on the school board has been rewarding in seeing each school's accomplishments and the work of students, and challenging from a financial perspective where the board has had to make difficult funding choices and prioritization.
