It's been awhile... We've been missing you, and we know you've been missing Southwestern.

What a time this has been. As I write this, we are passing the one-year mark of the COVID pandemic. So much has been disrupted, so much has changed.

We were not able to gather as a Builder family for Homecoming or Founders' Weekend. This is the first issue of the Southwesterner since before the pandemic. We have not been able to visit with each other in-person for quite some time.

One thing that has not changed is the Builder Spirit. Our resolve and resilience, our connections and relationships, remain at the heart of everything we do and everything we value. As the pandemic begins to ebb and we move into this next period of our lives, as hope and some normalcy begin to bloom again, there is much to be proud of and much to look forward to.

Southwestern College has not only made it through the past year in a fashion we all are proud of, but we also emerge as a stronger College, in a better position. Our enrollment is higher than it has ever been, with more full-time students than at any point in our history. This fall we welcomed an amazing Freshman class of 229 students, 20% larger than our previous all-time record incoming class. We are in a stronger and more stable financial position than we have enjoyed in quite some time. Our athletic programs are experiencing tremendous seasons. Our faculty are remarkable, demonstrating the incredible responsive attention and care for students that has always been the hallmark of Southwestern.

When the pandemic hit last spring, we pivoted quickly, over the course of a single week, to finish the semester with virtual learning, even as over 100 students remained in residence on campus.

Over the summer, we put together a return to school plan that positioned us quite well. We were aggressive in terms of the safety measures for our students, faculty, and staff and aggressive in re-opening for the fall semester. In the face of great uncertainty and significant challenges, the Builder Way prevailed. We remained dedicated to our students' well-being, to their education, to their success. We were the first college in Kansas to open this past autumn.

What we've accomplished together since last July, when students arrived here to their home on the hill, is nothing short of amazing. Last fall, with all the precautions in place, students got back to learning in-person, back to building meaningful relationships, back to competing and performing. Faculty returned to classrooms, teaching behind plexiglass in rooms of spread-out and masked students. While the approach may look a bit different, the outcomes are the same; faculty are mentoring and advising, creating connection — changing lives. Coaches are busy helping student-athletes build character through competition while remaining healthy and getting stronger. Staff are working at full-speed, managing operations, and caring for students in the most profound ways.

Indeed, there have been many modifications here on campus. Proactive testing is constant, distancing, and masks required, but together we have managed and limited the spread of COVID-19. I am immensely proud of what we have accomplished and, while we've got a handful of busy weeks ahead of us before commencement, students, faculty, and staff are doing well and making great progress. To be sure, this year has looked and felt different in many ways, but it has been a very good year.

Now, after a long break, we are back to producing and sending out The Southwesterner. In this edition, you'll see in photographs, stories, and notes from our alumni what we've always known to be true; the Builder Way means always finding a way forward.

The relationships and care that have been continuously woven into the fabric of Southwestern College since 1885 have held us together during this time. Our strengths as an institution, ingenuity, resilience, and faithfulness have been on full display since this time last March. I am tremendously proud of our students, faculty, and staff. I hope you feel that pride too.

I am sorry that during this challenging time, we have not been able to gather, that we have not had The Southwesterner sharing news of the college and our fellow Builders, that we have missed out on traditions like gathering at Homecoming and welcoming new classes into our Halls of Fame. Mostly, though, I look forward with pride and great anticipation to all that will be in this coming year, all that will return, and all the ways we come together.

It is more evident to me than ever before just what our college is capable of – especially when we have the support of our alumni and friends. Many thanks for your continued prayers and support.

With gratitude,

Brad Andrews, President

Head athletic trainer reflects on Southwestern's response to pandemic

Since beginning work at the college, 12 years ago, Lock Schnelle has been on the sidelines to support and care for student-athletes. Schnelle has cheered, consoled, advised, and helped student-athletes heal.

In the spring of 2020, as the world responded to a fast spreading global pandemic, Schnelle's responsibilities at Southwestern took on new weight. He was appointed to the college's COVID-19 Action Team along with several other staff and members of faculty. The group developed the return to campus plan and has continued to review proposals and plans throughout the year. Additionally, Schnelle oversees on-campus testing.

In the fall, over 6,000 antigen tests were administered. By mid-March of spring 2021 over 4,000 tests had been conducted. He has also helped the college's dean of students, Dan Falk, manage quarantine, isolation, and the ongoing care of students who have tested positive for COVID-19.

How do you think students have responded to these extraordinary times?

Overall, they have adjusted and been willing to do what is asked of them. I believe they understand this year will be one for the record books. They are appreciative of the opportunity just to get back to learning and, for the student-athletes playing their sport, because they recognize that it is not always guaranteed.

Lock Schnelle has been the head athletic trainer at Southwestern since 2016 and in recent months he's played an important role in managing the college's response to COVID-19.

mix. I am fortunate in two ways, 1) I'm surrounded by an incredible staff that has been willing to jump in whenever and wherever needed and 2) I have a very supportive spouse, who has picked up more than her share as I have taken on more in the healthcare world.

What has brought you joy this year?

It's brought me a lot of joy to see all of the planning come together. There have been many individuals working countless hours since last spring with a shared end goal, focused on a successful academic year for our students. Playing a part in keeping our students learning in-person and seeing student-athletes do what they love is what it's all about for me.

What have you learned through this experience?

Together, there's not much that we can't figure out. Our faculty, staff, and administration came together to tackle this challenge in a proactive way. And I think we did an outstanding job in preparing the college for the return of students. We continue to protect the Builder family as best we can, and we'll keep working hard to keep everyone safe and healthy as we move forward.

The entire campus community was tested before the start of both the fall and spring semesters. Typically between 300 and 400 tests are administered on campus each week.

What has it been like to balance the demands presented this year?

Generally speaking, in the athletic training world, there are always a lot of balls to juggle. COVID added a few more to the Hall and Detter '20-'21 Scholars of the College

"Every year we have the remarkable honor of recognizing the Scholars of the College," says Ross Peterson-Veatch, academic dean of Southwestern College. "We are proud of this excellent pair of Moundbuilders for their commitment to their academic pursuits. In addition to their achievements in the classroom, these two Scholars of the College are leaders in the true Builder Spirit. It is a great joy to celebrate their accomplishments."

Erin Hall is a senior from Norwich, majoring in philosophy and religion. She is the daughter of Don Hall and Laurie and Joe Hageman.

Nicholas Detter is a senior from Andover, majoring in sustainability and environmental studies. He is the son of Mark and Julie Detter.

These two students have achieved the highest grade-point average among full-time students who are enrolled in campus-based programs for the 2020-2021 academic year, having earned 85 or more credit hours, and who have not previously been named to the honor.

Learning at work

As S and Y Industries employees worked extra hours to supply circuit boards for ventilators, SC education students helped their children stay on track with remote learning.

This spring the Southwestern College Learning Center and S and Y Industries teamed up to provide remote learning support for children of S and Y employees.

Matt Miers, who is a 2008 Southwestern graduate, is the general manager at S and Y Industries which is a electronic component manufacturer specializing in circuit boards. S and Y has just over 100 employees who provide services for multiple industries including medical, aerospace, and commercial/industrial. Miers said that S and Y employees were finding it difficult to manage a work schedule and child care, which included remote learning for many local elementary, middle, and high school students. Many area school districts in the area have toggled from in-person to remote learning dependent on case rates and outbreaks.

Jaron White '21, physical education major, answers Aianna Estrada's questions while completing a remote learning assignment. S and Y transformed an auxiliary space at their manufacturing facility into a temporary learning center for the children of employees.

As cases of COVID-19 climbed in the summer of 2020 demand for ventilators in the U.S. surged. S and Y partnered with Ventec Life Systems, selected by GM and the U.S. Government, to mass produce portable ventilator systems. S and Y saw a resulting increase in manufacturing and employee hours. Simultaneously, employees important to the production process needed to take off of work to care for their children who's schools had temporarily ceased face-to-face learning.

"Our employees were struggling, having to work and then go home to watch and help their kids, and then coming back to work," Miers says. "We wanted to find a way to make this time easier on them, and started looking for ways to offer assistance."

According to Matt Miers, one option was to pay for the children of S and Y employees to attend the Southwestern College Learning Center, but the SCLC was already at capacity.

Fortunately, S and Y had recently purchased a building adjacent to their existing facility for expansion, but with the space not yet ready for manufacturing, they quickly pivoted, and created a learning center in what was formerly office spaces. Miers reached out to J.K. Campbell, education division chair at Southwestern College and to Alexis Miers '06, director of the SC Learning Center. Alexis Miers worked with the Kansas Department of Health and Environment to obtain all of the necessary documentation and Campbell recruited Southwestern education students to staff the space.

"The available building at S and Y was set-up to easily accommodate students in a remote learning environment," Campbell says. "There is a large learning area with several adjoining offices which will allow our students to set up quiet, socially distanced learning areas for the children based on age, grade level, and learning needs.

George Reeves '24, elementary education major, helps Acen Estrada with a math assignment focused on addition and subtraction. Reeves is also a student worker at the Southwestern College Learning Center, a pre-school and after-school program open to the children of college faculty, staff and community members.

"I'm grateful that I got a chance to witness and help out during this pandemic,"

– Annika Newby, '22

The building already has an entry area which accommodates safety protocols, including check-in and check-out of children by parents, and meets requirements specific to the pandemic such as temperature checks upon entry."

S and Y transformed the space and purchased school materials based off of a list Campbell provided to facilitate learning.

"I provided a list of items necessary to meet the needs of children in an all-day instructional setting such as whiteboards, tables, and chairs to fit the various ages of children. The team of SC students placed at the site provided children with brain breaks and promoted physical activity, in addition to supporting the children with their remote learning needs," added Campbell.

Alexis Miers thought it was important to not only help out local industry, especially a business working to manufacture life saving equipment, but also to offer a teaching opportunity for SC students.

"We just really wanted to offer a service that helped families by making it easier to learn and work and for SC students this was a great chance to learn while supporting young learners," Alexis Miers says.

Campbell also agreed that this partnership was a win-win situation.

"Our students benefit anytime they can engage with children and build skills necessary to be successful teachers," Campbell said. "This setting helped SC education students develop skills, building positive relationships with kids and their families, collaborating with experienced educators to benefit the children, learning what it takes to work one-on-one or with small groups, and finding ways to help children be successful," said Campbell

Campbell adds that he is pleased Southwestern College has students willing to step up and offer support to S and Y industry employees and their children in what is a difficult time for everyone.

Annika Newby, a Southwestern College junior from Oklahoma City, has been working at the SCLC and has taken a leadership role in organizing online learning support for children at the center.

"Working with these kids has been a great experience for me and has given me helpful insight that I will take with me when I become an elementary school teacher. Although this journey hasn't been easy it's been very rewarding and I'm simply grateful for that," said Newby.

The learning center at S and Y opened on January 4 and averaged 10 learners attending each day.

Teacher of the Year

Tabatha (McMullen) Rosproy '09 honored as the 2020 National
Teacher of the Year.

*“Because she’s
the best teacher

four-year-old Lexy Gray confidently exclaimed at the end of a CBS This Morning segment featuring students of Tabatha (McMullen) Rosproy '09. The video was aired on national television moments after Rosproy was announced the 2020 National Teacher of the year.

As the host of the morning show cut back to Rosproy, who was sitting in her Winfield home, the background of her webcam framed a wall covered with colorful artwork from students, tears welled in her eyes. “I am overwhelmed with joy,” she said.

Now, more than a year after being named Kansas Teacher of the Year, as her term as National Teacher of the Year comes to a close, Rosproy continues doing the work she had intended, even if the honor came during a time of exceptional circumstance, a year of pandemic and physical distancing.

Rosproy poses with her class and Cumberland resident “grandparents” as they celebrated pajama day together in 2019.

Rosproy, who has spent her career dedicated to early childhood education, is the first preschool teacher to be honored as the National Teacher of the Year. She played a pivotal role in launching and leading USD 465’s intergenerational classroom at Cumberland Village. The premise of the “Little Vikes” program is to forge relationships between the preschool students and the residents of the retirement village. Before the onset of the pandemic, residents regularly volunteered in the classroom. Rosproy shared that many of the most active and faithful volunteers also happened to be alumni of Southwestern. The classroom was in its second year of operation when students moved to online learning to mitigate the risk of spreading COVID-19.

“Safety has to be our number one priority, but I know it has been really hard for the residents who grew attached to seeing and working with our students,” said Rosproy. “I’m really motivated to continue to find moments of connection with the volunteers even though I can’t visit them right now. For instance, I like to send them cards.”

If not for the pandemic, Rosproy would have been out of the classroom in 2020. As National Teacher of the Year, she would’ve been out on tour. Though the context for her tenure has been dramatically altered, many of the typical engagements moved to an online format. Fortunately, Rosproy’s creativity and optimistic spirit have allowed her to continue to captivate audiences across the nation, even if through video conference.

“I’ve always believed that teaching is 90% theater and I think that might even be more true when communicating through a screen.”

Rosproy added, “Just another reason I’m thankful for my experience at Southwestern, doing improv and theater, and being in various leadership roles on campus I learned how to have a presence and to engage others regardless of the setting.”

Typically honorees travel extensively, giving keynote addresses at national conferences and high-profile gatherings. They meet with politicians and thought-leaders and, in doing so, serve as an advocate for teachers and elevate the national conversation around education.

Even though she hasn’t physically been able to attend many events, she has continued to find spaces to talk about what motivates and inspires her as an educator and she’s found a way to elevate the voices of teachers. Primarily her message centers around being an advocate for early childhood education and social-emotional education at all age levels.

“Since we were presented with this terrible situation, I’ve been constantly trying to think of what can I do – even if it’s just one thing a day, one step at a time, to empower teachers to have a voice to be advocates for themselves and their students,” said Rosproy.

Just as young learners and teachers across the nation have found a way to carry on, in most cases by going to a virtual learning model, so has Rosproy. She has spoken at national symposiums and assemblies, commencement ceremonies, and to classrooms of aspiring educators. While most of the engagements have been virtual they have still been meaningful.

“When I found out I would have the opportunity to share my message alongside all of these incredible people – like Ruby Bridges, LaVar Burton, and now President Joe Biden, just these truly incredible people and leaders of our country, it was a little overwhelming,” said Rosproy. “The idea that this teacher from a small town in Kansas can have enough to talk about, a message important enough to share the stage with these incredible people – it really says something about what we’re doing in our community and the program we’ve started and the influence of an early childhood educator, like me, who doesn’t even have a Wikipedia page – it’s sort of unbelievable.”

While it may have been a strange year to receive such an honor, Rosproy has enjoyed the experience immensely.

Rosproy taught Fine Arts in the Elementary School at Southwestern in the fall of 2019. J.K. Campbell, education division chair, describes Rosproy, “She is truly a champion for children and their learning, for teachers, and for public education.”

As she reflects on the experience, she mentions all the people who have supported her and all of the people who she has had the opportunity to meet along the way.

In part, she credits Southwestern with helping her understand the value of interpersonal connection especially when trying to teach and learn.

“Relationships are the beginning and the end of everything,” she said.

Rosproy’s work as National Teacher of the Year and the relationships she continues to build with young students, retirees, and fellow teachers across the nation, is proof that connection is possible as long as we have hope and are willing to put in the effort.

Rosproy has recently announced that she accepted a position with Olathe Public Schools as an early childhood support teacher. Additionally, she is planning to enroll in a doctoral program at Kansas University where she will study the impact of intergenerational learning.

The Builder Way

INGENUITY, RESILIENCE, FAITHFULNESS

Together, students, faculty, and staff have embraced a school year unlike any other. “The Builder Way” has been on full display since spring of 2020.

Students managed to uphold traditions formal and informal alike; building the Mound and sledding down our hill on dining hall trays, as they simultaneously modified their activities and limited contact, diligently working and learning while avoiding the virus and quarantine.

So many lessons about responsibility and living and community have been learned on campus in this academic year. Examples of adaptation and problem-solving abound. The reality of the pandemic required increased flexibility and communication.

Whether students were performing musicals in masks designed to fit their characters or showing up for their weekly COVID-19 tests, Builders have continued to come together to make the best of this challenging and historic time.

As the redbuds bloom along the 77 and spring draws nearer to finals, students have had the opportunity to be vaccinated on campus and there is hope for a safe summer and a fall return to campus that looks and feels much more like normal.

Always forward, together.

Quarterback, Brad Cagle is hoisted into the air after scoring a touchdown at Bethel College. Moundbuilder Football finished the season ranked 24th in the NAIA.

Builder sports spring forward

With the majority of fall athletics stretching into the spring to complete schedules, it has been a memorable and busy year for student-athletes, coaches and staff.

Cross Country

was the lone sport to complete all of their team events in the fall. Men's Cross Country finished 10th in the KCAC and the women finished in the 8th spot at the KCAC Championships. Junior, Elgin Messi, qualified for and competed at NAIA Cross Country Nationals on April 9. Messi finished the men's 8k run with an official time of 27:37.52, putting him in 218th overall out of 317 participants. The time is a season-best for him.

Both men's basketball (18-11) and women's basketball (2-20) were able to complete their seasons prior to the end of February. The men's team won two KCAC tournament games before bowing out to the eventual tournament winner in the semi-finals. Notably, two freshmen, received significant post-season honors. Amanda Graddy was named to the All-KCAC Freshman team and Steele Gaston-Chapman was named the KCAC Freshman of the Year and was added to the All-Freshman Team.

The cheer and dance team welcomed new head coach Julia Kramm, who was hired in February. Kramm is excited to begin this new chapter as the head cheer and dance coach at SC.

Football (7-2), volleyball (8-24), men's soccer (8-5-1), and women's soccer (11-5) each resumed play this spring. In total, 14 men's and women's sports have been in action this spring.

True spring sports, which missed competition in 2020, were anxious to return this spring. Tennis, baseball, softball, golf, and track each still have many competitions ahead of them before the end of the season, and all are exhibiting strong performances and picking up wins against NAIA ranked opponents.

IN MEMORIAM OF FRIENDS

Eleanor King Richardson, friend of Southwestern College, died July 20, 2019, at Cumbernauld Village. Eleanor was preceded in death by her husband, Leonard Richardson '50. Survivors include her children, Ann L. Richardson '77, Beth (Wilke) '78 married to Steve Wilke '78, and David Richardson, five grandchildren including Joel Wilke '07 (Lindsay (Morgan) Wilke '08) and Julie Wilke '09/'11/'18, and nine great-grandchildren.

Mildred Helmer, friend of Southwestern, died Sept. 11, 2019. Mildred is survived by her children, Ron Helmer '70, Jim Helmer '71 (Deb Settle Helmer '71), and Lynnette St. Vrain '76, eight grandchildren including Cory Helmer '99 (Nichole Ferguson '10), Victoria Arther '99, Cassie Turner '02/'08, Kristi Rowe '03 (Luellic Rowe '04), Justin Helmer '04, Ashley (Helmer) Riley '08 (Wendell Riley '06), and 16 great-grandchildren.

Newton Richardson, longtime friend of the college, passed away on Aug. 2, 2019. Newt, along with brother Leonard Richardson '50, were the force behind Richardson Bros. Construction Company.

For over three decades, they were the builders of Winfield, Strother Field, and surrounding communities, and in recognition of their work, were given the first Business Builder Award bestowed by Southwestern. In 2009, the brothers gave the college a commercial building in downtown Winfield, which enabled the college to move Little Builders preschool program off campus, making it more convenient for the parents of preschoolers. Newt is survived by his wife of 70 years, Doris Richardson '63, daughters Susan Lowe '95 (George Lowe '74) and Alice Simmons, son Stan Richardson (Ann Myers Richardson '77), seven grandsons including Builders Scott Lowe '98 (Dana Campbell Lowe) and Jeffrey Newton Lowe '01 (Brooke Youle Lowe '01), and 22 great-grandchildren.

Daniel Nutter: a passion for books and nature

Daniel Nutter, former librarian, died March 21, 2019. Daniel was awarded the Southwestern College Ambassador Award in 2016. He became a Master Gardner and a Master Naturalist and was a member of the Burnet County Fair Board, Birds and Wildflower Society, and the First United Methodist Church of Marble Falls.

Daniel is survived by his two children, Charles Nutter and Margaret Wofford '87, and granddaughter Leslie Wofford '19. The family has suggested memorial contributions be made to the Southwestern College Builder Fund in his memory.

Forward / Now campaign launches toward $12M goal

On the evening of February 25, 2021, President Brad Andrews and Patrick Wagner, vice president for institutional advancement, hosted a live broadcast from the 77 steps. In the background, Christy Administration Building was emblazoned in dramatic purple light calling attention to the special event.

The livestream began and the two officially kicked-off the public phase of Southwestern’s capital campaign, Forward / Now. They took turns introducing video segments featuring alumni, students, and staff of the college who outlined the importance each component included as part of the campaign.

“While we weren’t able to host an in-person event to celebrate the initiatives of this campaign, going live from the 77 was an exciting way to gather the Builder family to celebrate the future of Southwestern College,” said Wagner.

Forward / Now was born of a campus-wide strategic prioritization process and is focused on positively impacting the student experience in an immediate way.

As a project is funded, work begins. Accordingly the Center for Career and Vocation has been staffed and in operation since construction concluded nearly two years ago. It has been an important resource for students since.

Additionally, as a part of the campaign, a learning space on campus has already been transformed. The Jewell Family Learning Lab for the Natural Sciences hosts formal and informal study groups and tutoring sessions in addition to numerous classes.

“Moundbuilders move the world forward in positive and important ways, and our students, these Builders need Southwestern College now more than ever,” said Andrews during the live broadcast.

At the time of publication $9.5 million of the $12 million campaign goal has been raised. The Forward /Now campaign is set to complete in early 2022.

Students and faculty have identified specific projects that Forward / Now will immediately impact:

// GROWING BUILDER FUND

Unrestricted gifts to Southwestern’s Builder Fund provide critical resources to enhance the Southwestern College experience—by supporting academics, scholarships and financial aid, athletics, arts, student life, sustainability and every other aspect of the college.

// DEVELOPING AN INTERDISCIPLINARY HONORS PROGRAM

The Honors Program at Southwestern College will offer opportunities for highly motivated students to dive deeper into their academic interests, while simultaneously developing critical thinking skills and community. The SC Honors Program will be rooted in the tradition of liberal arts, establishing an interdisciplinary academic experience that draws on innovative approaches to teaching and learning.

// ESTABLISHING PREMIER LEARNING SPACES IN EACH ACADEMIC BUILDING

Leveraging feedback from the campus community, underutilized spaces in each academic building on campus will be transformed into innovative, engaging and resource-rich educational environments where faculty are proud to teach and where students are excited to learn.

// BUILDING THE BRUCE DEHAVEN ATHLETIC CENTER

The traditions of team athletics and of character development through sport are intricately woven into the history of Southwestern College. A new training and practice facility on campus will create attractive and much-needed indoor team meeting, locker room and weight training space.

// OPENING AND STAFFING A CENTER FOR CAREER AND VOCATION

The Center for Career and Vocation supports and empowers students as they identify personal values, interests, skills, and strengths. The center provides opportunities for students to explore occupations, gain valuable experience and make connections to employers, graduate programs, and other resources.

// RESIDENCE HALL RENOVATIONS

The comfort and amenities provided in residential spaces are of great importance to prospective students and their families as they consider a college. Renovating campus residence halls will create more inviting and comfortable accommodations for our growing student population.

STEP UP + FOR SOUTHWESTERN +

Builders connect online and Step Up for SC

The strength and dedication of Builder Nation never ceases to amaze me. In the words of Larry Williams '60, "We Builders always find a way to move forward and lead." In a time when much of the world feels disconnected, the alumni office has been hosting Virtual Alumni Meet Ups to share what is happening here at the college.

President Andrews gave a state of the college, Rodney Worsham gave us a glimpse into the admissions process, Dawn Pleas spoke about the strong tradition of diversity, and so much more. If you've missed one of our Virtual Meet Ups, video recordings are available at sckans.edu/MeetUp. Even as we are looking forward to hosting more virtual gatherings in the near future, we can't wait to see you on campus next year for homecoming, Winterfest, Founders Weekend and more.

On March 25, 2021, we held our second annual day of giving—Step Up for Southwestern. On this special day of giving all gifts made to the Builder Fund were matched dollar-for-dollar by a group of generous donors. Builders from across the world joined in support of the students of Southwestern College. Two special Builders in particular, Joe '61 and Clestele (Justice) '62 Anderson, celebrated their 60th wedding anniversary by stepping up for Southwestern. To see all of the statistics for the day visit sckans.edu/StepUp.

Please, don't forget if you've moved, started a new job, received an award, expanded your family, etc., we want to know. Submit your updates by visiting sckans.edu/WhatsNew.

Go Builders!
